The roots of most crop plants need a moderate amount of air and moisture. They are thus enabled better to withstand drought and to produce greater yields. Soils rich in humus admit air more readily and retain larger quantities of water. Like the camel on a transdesert journey, such soils often imbibe sufficient water to last until the next oasis or drought-breaking rain is reached. It has been shown that while 100 pounds of sand can hold only 25 pounds of water and 100 pounds of clay 50 pounds, the same weight of humus or decaying organic matter will hold 190 pounds. This is a most convincing argument that the farmer should so increase the moisture-retention capacity of his soil as to provide reservoirs of water against the time of drought.

As the green manure, after it is turned under, decays, it provides food for soil bacteria. These bacteria break down and make available for use by crop plants the organic matter contained in the soil.

The roots of legumes, the most desirable of crops for green manuring purposes, have on them growths of varying sizes known as nodules. These nodules are produced by bacteria, the latter drawing their sustenance from the host plant, the legume. These bacteria, however, in the beneficial work they do, more than earn their board. The nodules serve as laboratories for the bacteria, whose task is to bring down into the soil for plant use a supply of free nitrogen. When these legumes are turned under the nitrogen, after passing through certain chemical processes, is changed into nitrates, a food as popular with crop plants as baked beans with Boston Yankees.

The question as to whether the entire crop of legumes should be turned under or the hay cut and merely the stubble plowed under is one to be determined largely by the degree of soil fertility and porosity, the system of agriculture followed, and other local conditions. In general, however where the need for soil improvement is urgent, the entire crop can, with greater profit, be turned under.

Rodents Destroy Great Deal of Farmer's Grain

The saving of grain from rats and mice and other rodents is of vital importance in making the farm pay, a maximum of profit. Every farmer knows that rodents destroy a great deal of grain, even though he may not know how much. The United States Department of Agriculture estimates that every rat eats or destroys at least $2 worth of feed in one year.

Proper storage of grain in strong corn cribs and granaries which have been so built as to resist the encroachments of rats and mice will save the farmer a large sum of money each year.

Concrete corn cribs and granaries are being built by many farmers nowadays because concrete construction is proof against rodents. They cannot gnaw their way into a concrete granary, nor are the surfaces in these structures such that they can climb the walls and enter.

Added to the fact that concrete granaries are rodent-proof are the many other important considerations in connection with this permanent type of construction. Concrete structures are fire-safe; the farmer need not be fearful that his grain supply will be destroyed by fire. Such construction is proof against weather, thus eliminating the danger of the grain being spoiled by dampness.

Lime is a form of plant food. Analysis will show that it is found in all plants the same as nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash. It is not usually what we may call an essential element, since most soils contain lime enough for plant requirements. Clover and alfalfa contain considerable lime and also the wood growth in trees, and needs. Many soils are quite lacking in nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash, so that these elements must be used in manures or fertilizers, but the common need of lime is to bring about some chemical action in the soil.

The DAIRY

GRAIN MIXTURES FOR DAIRY COWS

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

It is very desirable that feeds for dairy cows be palatable, so as to insure a sufficiently large consumption. If necessary to use any unpalatable feed mix it with some that are appetizing. Also see that the grain mixture is light and bulky. Avoid using too large a quantity of either constipating or laxative feed. Cottonseed meal, for example, is decidedly constipating and is best fed with laxative grains such as wheat bran and linseed oilmeal or succulent feeds such as silage or roots. For ordinary feeding in most parts of the United States not more than one-third of the grain ration should be cottonseed meal. Linseed-oil meal, because of its distinctly laxative action, should not, as a rule, be fed in greater quantities than one and one-half pounds a day. Select grains that will furnish the various constituents, especially protein, at the least cost, using home-grown grains if possible.

The composition of the grain ration will depend largely upon the kind of roughages available.

The following grain mixtures are adapted to be fed with roughages of the low-protein class, such as corn silage, corn stover, timothy, prairie, rowen or millet hays, cottonseed hulls, etc.:

No. 1

Per cent of digestible protein, 19.8:
100 pounds corn meal
100 pounds cottonseed meal
100 pounds linseed meal (old process)
200 pounds wheat bran

No. 2

Per cent of digestible protein, 19.8:
200 pounds corn-and-cob meal
100 pounds cottonseed meal
100 pounds linseed meal (old process)

No. 3

Per cent of digestible protein, 18.8:
200 pounds corn meal
150 pounds cottonseed meal
100 pounds gluten feed
100 pounds wheat bran

No. 4

Per cent of digestible protein, 18.1:
200 pounds corn meal
100 pounds cottonseed meal
100 pounds oats, ground
100 pounds linseed meal (old process)

No. 5

Per cent of digestible protein, 18.4:
300 pounds corn-and-cob meal
200 pounds cottonseed meal

With roughage of the high-protein class, such as clover, alfalfa, soy beans, cowpeas and vetch or other legume hay, the following grain mixtures may be used:

No. 6

Per cent of digestible protein, 14.1:
400 pounds corn meal
100 pounds cottonseed meal
100 pounds gluten feed
100 pounds wheat bran

No. 7

Per cent of digestible protein, 15.6:
400 pounds corn meal
200 pounds gluten feed
200 pounds linseed meal (old process)
100 pounds oats, ground

No. 8

Per cent of digestible protein, 10.7:
300 pounds barley
100 pounds cottonseed meal
100 pounds alfalfa meal
100 pounds wheat bran

No. 9

Per cent of digestible protein, 13.7:
100 pounds barley
200 pounds oatmeal meal
100 pounds oats, ground
100 pounds wheat bran

No. 10

Per cent of digestible protein, 15.8:
300 pounds corn-and-cob meal
200 pounds gluten feed
100 pounds cottonseed meal
100 pounds wheat bran

The following grain mixtures are adapted for feeding with a combination of the low and high-protein classes of roughage, such as silage and clover, or other legume hay; corn stover and clover, or other legume hay; mixed hay, or oat-and-pea hay, etc.:

No. 11

Per cent of digestible protein, 16.1:
300 pounds corn meal
100 pounds cottonseed meal
100 pounds linseed meal (old process)
200 pounds wheat bran

No. 12

Per cent of digestible protein, 16.7:
400 pounds corn meal
100 pounds cottonseed meal
200 pounds gluten feed
200 pounds dried brewers' grains

No. 13

Per cent of digestible protein, 16.4:
200 pounds corn-and-cob meal
100 pounds cottonseed meal

No. 14

Per cent of digestible protein, 16.7:
200 pounds corn meal
100 pounds peanut meal (with hulls)
100 pounds cottonseed meal
100 pounds wheat bran

No. 15

Per cent of digestible protein, 16.4:
100 pounds corn meal
100 pounds oats, ground
100 pounds cottonseed meal
100 pounds wheat bran

The mixtures which contain linseed meal are particularly adapted for use when no succulence is in the ration.

Depraved Appetite

Lack of minerals or some other essential to complete nutrition is usually the cause of a depraved appetite. It may be a craving for these things that were not given in the ration and which are being taken from the body of the heavy milking cow in abundance in the milk stream. Vitamin D is said to be essential at such times and as it is found in cod liver oil you might feed each one a teaspoonful of that on the grain feed and add a tablespoonful of bone meal.

Feeding Saves Fertility

Feeding stock saves fertility that would otherwise be lost if feeds were sold directly off the farm. A ton of alfalfa hay or barley contains $6.00 to $8.00 worth of fertility value, 75 per cent of which the steer will return to the farm if the manure is carefully handled.

Live Stock Jots

White hogs are more subject to sunscald on rape pasture than red or black hogs.

Ohio is the eighth state in the Union in value of live stock. Iowa is first and Texas second.

Some brood sows give twice as much milk as other sows and where litters are large will become rather thin even though fed heavily.

Do not overlook the guard rails in the farrowing pen. They will prove a haven to the little fellows, especially if the mother is large and clumsy.

If the old grey mare "isn't what she used to be" is there a likely colt coming along to take her place?

Keep the pigs growing from the day they are born until the day they are sold. Those to be kept for brood sows should be separated and fed for growth and not for fat.

Nearly all of the common hog diseases can be prevented by keeping the hogs well fed, clean and free from worms and lice, and by providing dry, clean shelter, yards and places to eat

CITY LOSES AN ACTIVE WORKER

HARRY L. OLDHAM PASSES AT NOON TUESDAY

Had Suffered Ill Health for Several Years—Funeral Thursday From Park Avenue Home

Harry L. Oldham, a resident of this city for the past twelve years, passed uwny nt his home on Park nvenue, Tuesday, January 12, after an illness of long duration, an illness which had confined him to his home most of the time.

Mr. Oldham was 57 years of age at the time of his death, having been horn on the Island of Jersey, off the coast of France, in the year 1868. He came to this county when a young man 19 years old, making his home in New York for some time, moving from there to Chicago where he was connected with the firm of Conkling, Price & Webb, representing the London Guarantee & Accident Co., Ltd., in the insurance business, the Mr. Webb mentioned being the president of the Belvedere Club.

Upon lenving Chicago, Mr. Oldham moved to Decatur, Ill., representing the same firm as manager of their brnnch office in that city, nnd in conncetion with the insurance business, which at that time was the lnrgest agency in that state outside of Chicago, was also the manager of the Orlando Powers block of that city. The block managed hy Mr. Oldham was one block in length and contained one five-story building and five three-story buildings, including an opera house. He maintnined this connection for a period of sixteen years and his employer spnred no words in emphasizing his efficiency and management.

Mr. Oldham moved to this city nearly thirteen years ago, a retired business man, although his residence here has been mnrked hy much netivity in numerous ways. It may be truthfully said that Mr. Oldhnm rebuilt Park avenue nnd made it the beautiful residential street it is today. Through his efforts nnd finnncial assistnnce, the Charlevoix hospital was organized and presented to the community. Mr. and Mrs. Oldhnm entertained A. H. Loeb on his first visit to Charlevoix and hnndled the real estate transactions whereby Mr. Loeb acquired his holdings and, in fact, it was mninly through their efforts the Loebs settled here.

Mr. Oldham was very active in welfare work during the war nnd was chairman of the local war board, receiving medals from Washington in recognition of his serviecs. He nlso gnve the city the lot at the corner of Bridge street nnd Belvedere avenue as a memorial to fallen soldiers of the late wnr. His efforts in behalf of the choir of the local Congregational church were only characteristic of his generosity in all matters of community welfare. His latest enterprise was the building and managing of the Oldham Club, one of the beauty spots of Charlevoix, which has had three very successful seasons, and which also has been the scene of one charity dance after another, a credit to its founder's generosity.

Mr. Oldham was mnrried April 22, 1909, in the St. James Episcopal ehureh, Detroit, to Miss Grace L. Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Willis Johnson of Detroit, who at the time of her marriage was organiat and leader of a choir of forty voices in the church where their marriage oecurred. To this union were born three children, two daughters, Morella and Marcia, and one son, Harry Lester, Jr., who, with the widow, survive. Mr. Oldham is also aurvived by one sister, Mrs. C. D. Oldham of Rugley, Staffordshire, England, and one brother, Sidney Oldham, also residing in England.

NOVAK GETS THREE VIOLATORS IN DETROIT

One Out on $1000 Bond and Others In County Jail

Sheriff Charles Novak returned last Saturday from Detroit, accompanied by three prisoners he picked up there who were wanted here for vurious offenses.

Chas. Nietsel of East Jordan, charged with disposing of goods on which a chattel mortgage was held by an Ypsilanti party, was brought before Justice of the Peace Cooper, Monday. He demanded a hearing and was bound over to circuit court and released upon furnishing bond of $1,000. Chas. Kroll of Boyne City, is now in the county jail, held on the charge of deserting wife and children and passing bogus checks on an East Jordan bank. Kroll is termed as a "hard character" and when picked up in Detroit was a student member of their police force. Joe Shope, also of East Jordan, is in the jail, held on the charge of transporting a car from the county which he had not paid for, and making false statements in regard to his former employment and financial condition.

It is expected the last two named will plead guilty, and disposition of their cases will he made later.

CLEAR ALL ROADS TO THE STRAITS

HIGHWAY DEPARTMENT WILL KEEP MAIN LINES IN ORDER

New Plan Will Add About 625 Miles to Highways Now On Snow Removal Program

Open roads in the northern part of the state throughout the winter were nuthorized Jun. 5, when the administrative board ordered the highway depnrtment to proceed with plans to keep four principal north and south trunk lines open to the straits.

Highwnys 10, 11, 13 and 14 are to be included in the program which will add approximntely 625 miles to the 3,000 miles of state road now on the removal program.

The state will have to furnish practically all the equipment used in the north and effective removnl of snow will be accomplished by employing large rotary plows. Drifts and heavy snows made it impossible to depend on ordinary light equipment.

Cost of show removal is $100 a mile which includes rental of equipment. The state will have to purchase equipment this year. Delivery can not be made at once, so it will be at least a month before the northern traffic arteries can be opened.

"It has never been determined whether it is possible to keep the highways open in the northern part of state," Governor Groesbeck told the bonrd. "It seems advisnble to determine whether this step is practical and an experiment this year will enable us to make plans in the future."

Highway commissioner Rogers expressed his opinion that the roadways could probably be kept open with detours on county roads in sections where the trunk lines are subject to heavy drifts.

WILL MANAGE HARDWARE COMPANY

L. A. Cannon Assumed New Duties Monday Morning

L. A. Cannon, formerly of Crystal Falls, upper peninsula, assumed the position Monday as manager of the Charlevoix Hardware Co.

Mr. Cannon comes well recommended and has a number of years' experience in handling a business of this character. The Charlevoix Hardware Co. is known throughout northern Michigan as being one of the bast equipped stores in this section, and under the manngership of Mr. Cannon, should continue to hold its plnce, not only in volume of business, but as an attractive place to trade.

Mr. Cannon will be joined within the next week by his wife, who is now visiting friends in Chicago. Charlevoix extends the hand of welcome to these people whom we hope will become permanent residents here.

RESIDENT HERE DURING BOYHOOD

LONGS TO VISIT PLAYGROUND OF HIS YOUTH

W. B. Willis Reveals His Desire to Visit Charlevoix in Form of Expressive Poem

Under the caption of "My Old Home Town," W. B. Willis, of Silver Springs, Maryland, who spent his boyhood days in Charlevoix, expresses his desire to again visit the scenes of early life. The poem wns sent to his brother, James Willis, who in turn gave it to the Courier. We reproduce it with the thought that it fully expresses the feelings of many former residents of our beautiful city, who although they do not live here, carry the same feeling that prompted Mr. Willis to write as he did:

My Old Home Town

On the banks of old Lake Michigan,
In the land of ice and snow;
There's a plnce—they enll it Charlevoix,
A place you ought to know.

Tho' oft the howling blizzard
Lashes the cleft bound shores,
And the bay is filled with ice bergs,
While the restless breakers roar.

Then the sun comes forth in glory
Ten millions gems now shine,
Mid the scene of wondrous beauty
With a glory nll sublime.

Then the south wind gently loosens
The hand of giant frost,
And the cold and wintry aspect
Of the dear old bay is lost.

The song-birds come from the Southland
And rear their tender young,
And flowers fill the shady dells—
For Summer has begun.

T'was here I rambled o'er hill and dale
As a boy in the years gone by.
T'wns here I caught the speckled trout
With the man-mnde fly.

T'was here I worked 'till my muscles grew
And hardened strong nnd true,
Then roamed away to the distant fields;
To the pastures green nnd new.

And now tonight could I but return
To the haunts of my boyhood days—
And plunge once more in the limped depth
Of the dear old Traverse Bay.

Could I sit once more on the white sand beach
And list' to the swishing waves,
Or walk up town and sny, "Po-sho"
To the vanishing Indian brave.

Could I see but the place where a white stone marks
The rest of a mother true;
Could I leave the city I'd love to come
And visit awhile with you.

WHAT IS THIS GULF WATERWAY

ILLINOIS PLAN OF BIG CONCERN TO ALL MICHIGAN

No. 2

(By Arthur W. Stace.)

Chicago's front yard, sparkling Lake Michigan, popular beaches, beuutiful parks, magnificent boulevards, art gallery, stadium, museum, municipal pier, double-decked streets, stately architecture—wonderful Chicago.

Chicago's backyard, dingy skies, drab dreariness, an unlovely river crawling like a thing of evil among bridge abutments and piers, a brond ditch filled with filth dumping the sewage of 3,300,000 people upon their neighbors in what onee was a charming valley—gross Chicago.

Wonderful Chicago has worked a miracle of cleanliness and. beauty, transforming rubbish strewn shores and polluted waves into a wnterfront of rare sightliness, washed by the surf of a pure and healthful sea.

In working this mirncle gross Chicago has created that noisome thing that trails out of its backyard. And it has taken from Lake Michignn a grent river of water to flush its fetid wastes toward the Mississippi.

Dark River of Trouble

The river, flowing inland across the Illinois prairies to the Mississippi nnd thence to the Gulf of Mexico, instead of outward into the great lakes nnd thus by wny of the St. Lawrence to the Atlantic ocean, is the means by which Chicago keeps its lake front clean and its water supply uncontnminated. It is the basis of the city's existing but obsolescent sewage disposal system.

The size that this river should he and the amount of water it should be allowed to take from Lake Michigan hns been a bone of contention between the Chicago sanitary district and the United States government for many years. The government in this case has been defending the interest of great lakes navigation.

The government engineers figured thnt Chicago could take a flow of not to exceed 4,167 cubic feet per second without seriously damaging great lakes interests and so fixed this legal limit.

Bnt Chicago built its drainage canal on n basis of 10,000 c. f. s. diversion. It planned its whole sewage disposal system with that amount in view. It took in excess of 4,167 c. f. s. almost from the start of operntions in 1900. It gradually increased the amount until of late years it hus been taking between 8,800 and 10,000 c. f. s.

Up Against the Wall

Now the Chicago sunitary district is up against n United States supreme court decision upholding the federal government. It is up against war department orders to change its sewage disposal aystem from the outgrown dilution method to the modern treatment method, reducing diversion from 8,500 c. f. s. as fast as treatment works can be built until the authorized 4,167 c. f. s. stage is reached. It is up against a growing adverse public sentlment in the Illinoia valley. It is up against unexpected sanitary engineering difficulties that have developed in the system itself, the unwholesome fermenting sludge beds deposited along the drainnge course creating a new and serious problem.

So the Chicago sanitary district has revised its sewage disposal attitude and program.

Before the supreme court decision was rendered the sanitary district claimed it needed the 10,000 cubic feet a second diversion from Lake Michigan to dispose of the sewage of 3,000,000 population by the dilution method, that amount of water being the capacity of the drainage canal. The sanitary district embraces 50 cities and villnges, with an aggregate population of 3,300,000. Industrial wastes going into the sewage system are equivalent to an added 1,500,000 population. Thus the district has the sewage of a population of 4,800,000 to dispose of.

Change in Attitude

Its attitude before the supreme court decision was that it would go on indefinitely disposing of the sewage of 3,000,000 population by the dilution method, using the 10,000 c. f. s. from Lake Michigan, and would build treatment plants to dispose of the excess.

The sanitary district officials claimed that the job of constructing the trentment plants for the excess above 3,000,000, including growth in January Meeting Held Thursday at Home of Mrs. M. B. Hooker Was Well Attended

The January meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held with Mrs. M. B. Hooker last Thursday. As that was the annual national day of prayer for the work, time was taken for an extended devotional period during which many prayers were offered for the year's undertakings.

Plans were adopted which provided for working during 1926 under four departments, viz: Educational, Evangelistic, Citizenship and Social, each with a superintendent and two assistants. Every member is assigned to a department for work.

The paper of the day on the subject of anti-narcotics was presented by Mrs. Ed. Stewart, and contained some very illuminating statistics regarding the nation's annual tobacco bill of over two billion dollars, and the number of homes, school houses, etc., which the money might otherwise pay for.

Miss Lylas Johnston rendered two very pleasing instrumental solos. Tribute was paid to the memory of Mrs. Lillian M. Stevens, a pioneer temperance worker, in a short sketch read by Mrs. George Russell.

An interesting feature of the meeting was the story of the life of Mrs. Ella A. Boole, the new national W. C. T. U. president, by Mrs. H. S. Harsha, who is a peraonal friend of Mrs. Boole, the two having attended Wooster (Ohio) college at the same time.

The next meeting will he held with Mrs. Chas. Novnk on Friday, February 12th.

PROPERTY BRINGS A HIGH FIGURE

Outside Interests Have Acquired Considerable Holdings

This is only one of many pieces of lnke frontage which have been purchnsed by outside interests in the pnst year, all going nt a very high figure. Lake frontuge owned by John Simon, Mrs. Josie Baker and the Brooks' property near Norwood have nll changed hands in the past few months, nlong with several pieces of property on the South Arm and on Pine Lake. Thesa renl estate transfers only go to substantiate predictions that Charlevoix and vicinity enn look for a real estate boom within the next year or so.

SAYS WE NEED TOY FACTORY

CHARLEVOIX AN IDEAL LOCACATION SAYS MATHER

Toys Made in Charlevoix Would Have Added Charm to People in Milder Climate

Dan Muther, former resident of Charlevoix now living in St. Joseph, Michigan, believes Charlevoix an ideal location for a toy factory. In an article from his pen reproduced he states his reason for his belief and wonders why an effort has not been made to establish a plant of this kind here.

We ourself can see no reason why Charlevoix is not a likely spot to locate a factory of this kind. All we lack, and we think you will agree with us, is a person with the money, experience, and ability to put it across. Charlevoix people will do their part when this person puts in his appearance. If he comes with a proposition that is right, and means business, we are with him. But if he has a promotion scheme and wants a substantial bonus from the city, his proposition will deserve the closest scrutiny. We would he better off without any industry of this kind, or any kind for that matter, than to he taken in by u promotion scheme and left high and dry within a year or so.

Mr. Mather's letter follows:

Why Not a Toy Factory for Charlevoix

The children in their thoughts of Snnta Claus think of the Northland and the snow. Many of them visit us here in the summer time, and it would nlmost seem to me as if Charlevoix would have an added charm for them if they thought of it as tha land where their toys came from.

Why Charlevoix for a place to make toys?

They could be made at off seasons and would be a source of revenue to a great many people after the resort season ends.

It would be an industry which would interest our summer residents, and during the summer time could be made a show place.

It would not be an industry which would remind them of work and labors they are trying to forget during their summer months, and in fact might be easily almost shut down during the resort season.

By balancing the income of the residents over a larger portion of the year it would lessen the costs which the merchants have to charge our summer people at present.

At present it is not unlike an electric light company with lights used only at night. If they furnished power in the daytime also, it would equalize the load nnd cut down the cost of maintninance.

Freight would not be nn important considgration either for rnw materials or finished products, as none of these articles, considering the value, are of great size or weight.

I do not expect that my writing this article is going to bring such a thing to pnss in the next three or four weeks, hut it is sort of a pet day-dream of mine which I felt I would like to give vent to, und which seems to me to be entirely feasible, providing a company could be organized with sufficient capital and the determination to mnke it a success.

AT THE MOVIES

Audience Cheers "Charley's Aunt"

When they say "it's enough to make a cat laugh" they don't go quite far enough. "Charley's Aunt," with Syd Chaplin is more than enough to make a crab laugh—even those 'crabs' that never admit it was the picture which made them laugh it was only that they were feeling good.

Yes, we say this without any reservations whatsoever—"Charley's Aunt" is the funniest motion picture we have ever seen. It is a clean, wholesome story whose great charm and appeal lie in the simplicity of its humor interpreted by a cast of comedians who have caught the spirit of the farce and have carried it thru to an hilarious success.

The farce was originally produced in England thirty-three years ago and has played continuously and in almost every known language ever since. As a screen farce, however, it far surpasses the stage version partly because the screen permits greater latitude in settings, and largely because Syd Chaplin is by far the greatest comedy actor who ever assumed the title role.

Syd Chaplin has the soul of a true comedian. Every gesture, every lift of the eyebrow, evokes a humorous reaction from his audience yet he himself seldom so much as smiles. The production, directed by Scott Sidney, to whom much credit is due, in addition to being beautiful, is so smooth and steady it seems actually to flow along. There are no rny edges, no unfinished corners.

The simple story of a college boy who assumes the part of an elderly aunt in order to help his chums win the girls they love, is told in the straight from the shoulder manner which is so delightful and refreshing. Without recource to gags and by-plots the play attains a maximum of suspense and manages by some miracle to maintain the fullest share of comedy throughout every moment of the production. There is not a single slow moment in the film even in the rare intervals when Chaplin himself is not on the screen. At Palace Theatre, Wednesday, January 20th.

John Ford, who directed "The Iron Horse," the spectacular William Fox classic of the screen, felt perfectly at home with the cast of "Thank You," his latest Fox production made from the John Golden stage play and which opens a two day engagement at the Palace Theatre, Saturday and Snaday, January 16th and 17th.

For no less than four of the leading members of the "Thank You" company had important roles in "The Iron Horse."

George O'Brien, dashing young star of that epic of the West, also plays the hero rob in "Thank You." He is cast as a college boy just out in the world, bent on having a good time—until his stern father calls a halt and makes him get down to business. Then young George goes to a small town to look after some inherited property nnd promptly falls in love with the niece of an impoverished preacher. From there on "the plot thickens!"

J. Farrell MacDonald, the inimitable Corporal Casey of "The Iron Horse," has another deliciously humorous role in "Thank You," wherein he is cast as the village "bum" and odd-jobs man.

Cyril Chadwick, one of the "villains" of the other Ford production has a slightly less "villianous" role in "Thank You." In this latter film he is a village vestryman, who helps to make life hard for the patient little pastor of the flock.

Another member of both casts is Francis Powers, who played Sergeant Slattery to Mr. MacDonald's Corporal Casey, thereby coastituting two-thirds of "The Three Musketeers" of "The Iron Horse." In "Thank You" Mr. Powers plays the church sexton and a fifth "Iron Horse" in this production is Jack Ganzhorn, who plays a vestryman.

Lloyd Hamilton Changes Makeup For New Comedy, "Half a Hero"

Lloyd Hamilton, who will appear in his latest comedy, "Half a Hero" at the Palace Theatre, Saturday and Sunday, January 16th nnd 17th will be seen in a new make-up for this popular comedian.

Lloyd Hamilton, since his rise to starring fame, has stuck very consistently to one make-up—that of a simple-appearing unsophisticated youth. The ill-fitting trousers and coat and the ever-present checkered cap have become as well known as Chaplin's shoes, derby, cane and mustache, or Harold Lloyd's horn-rimmed spectacles. These individualities have become almost a part of these comedians.

Lloyd Hamilton will not abandon his familiar make-up altogether in "Half a Hero" but will appear in part of the picture in the uniform of "one of the finest," for he will be seen as a tarffic cop. The mannerisms which have made Hamilton one of the best known of the funny men will be present and the combination of the well-fitting uniform and the well-known Hamilton walk is said to have produced one of the funniest characterizations Hamilton has ever portrayed.

FARM STOCK

MODERN BARNYARDS ARE NOW SANITARY

Unsightly mudholes once so common to barnyards are gradually giving way on modern farms to sanitary pavements of concrete. No matter how well an unpaved barnyard may be drained or otherwise cared for, there are times when it is not only muddy, but filthy. This results in dirty, ill-kempt animals, and in dirty milk, because no matter how well milk cows may be cleaned they cannot be kept as clean if they must exercise in a muddy barnyard as when they have the advantages of a concrete pavement. In addition, the concrete-paved barnyard prevents waste of manure. Tests made at the Ohio experiment station to determine the relative value of manure removed from a concrete floor as compared with that taken from an unpaved yard proved that not only was more manure saved from the concrete paved floor, but that the quantity saved contained a higher percentage of phosphorus, potash and nitrogen.

Barnyard pavements are easy to make. Anyone who has had even a limited amount of experience can successfully undertake the work, and the man who has never had experience can acquire what is necessary in a short time by carefully following a few simple instructions obtained from the firm where he buys his cement. Not all of the pavements need be built at one time, but a strip at least twenty feet wide should be laid adjoining the barn. Additional strips can be added as desired.

Two types of construction may be used for barnyard pavements; one or two-course; the one-course construction being preferable and easier to build. A 1:2:3 mixture should be used, taking special care that the materials are well graded. The pavement should have a slope of one-fourth inch to the foot toward a gutter in one side of the pavement. This gutter will save liquid wastes dropped on the floor by draining them to a cistern or manure pit with which the floor should be connected. Slabs of a barnyard pavement should be limited to not more than ten feet square. Forms should be of two-inch lumber, four, five or six inches wide, depending upon thickness of the pavement. The top of the forms should be set to such a grade that a slope of one-fourth inch to the foot be secured for the floor for proper drainage.

While the barnyard pavement must have an even surface so that it will drain freely and be kept clean, it should not be finished so smooth as to make it slippery. If carefully and thoroughly finished by using a wood float it will have the same gritty mixture of surface secured by finishing a concrete floor in this manner and will thus provide a sure foothold for the animals.

Not all the area which it is intended to pave need be laid out with forms at the same time. Forms for one row of slabs can be provided just as though a stretch of concrete walk were being laid. Then after having marked this strip off into ten-foot squares with intermediate form strips, alternate areas can be concreted and when these have hardened sufficiently the crosspieces can be removed and the intermediate areas concreted. The operation is repeated for following strips, each of which serves as a form for one side of the strip laid next.

As all outdoor floors of which a concrete barnyard pavement is a type, expose a large surface to the atmosphere the concrete should be prevented from drying out so that it will harden uniformly and thoroughly. Just as soon as concreting has been finished and the concrete has hardened enough to prevent it from being marred by a protective covering of moist sand or earth, such covering should be kept in place and wet down during the first week or ten days so as to assist proper curing, as it is called. After the ten-day interval has elapsed, the covering may be removed and the pavement put to use, although heavy or loaded wagons should not be driven over the concrete until it is at least a month old. A barnyard pavement subjected to heavy loads should be at least six inches thick, otherwise four inches will be sufficient.

High Value of Alfalfa Shown at Iowa Station

The value of alfalfa in the ration is often underestimated. There is no comparison between it and timothy as a dairy feed. The Iowa experiment station recently conducted a feeding experiment comparing alfalfa hay and timothy hay as a roughage for milk production. Throughout the comparison a ration of corn silage and a grain mixture of four parts cracked corn, four parts ground oats and one part of oil meal by weight was fed. Alfalfa and timothy hay were fed alternately with the above ration. The results are compared on the basis of value per ton: When alfalfa is worth $15 per ton, timothy has a value of 80 cents per ton. At the present time this would make timothy hay worth about $1.50 per ton for milk cows. This low value is due to its low protein contents, high percentage of fiber, low percentage of ash and lack of palatability. Under these conditions it would seem advisable for dairymen who have only timothy hay to feed the herd, to sell it and buy alfalfa whenever possible.

Dairy Notes

Ventilation is imperative; drafts must be avoided in the dairy barn.

Give the dairy cow clean and comfortable quarters and she will, female like, chew in satisfaction.

A cow that has to use her energy warming the ice cold water she drinks can't use that energy to make milk.

Where bulk is not provided in the grain ration by other constituents, corn-and-cob meal will have a feeding value for dairy cows equivalent to an equal weight of corn meal.

The dairy farmer with the milk these days is likely to be the farmer who has a barn full of alfalfa hay.

The useful life of the average cow is 4.2 years. When those affected with tuberculosis are removed the average life in the herd is increased to 5.7 years.

Friendship cost least in money and makes most in profits.

INDEPENDENTS WIN GAME FROM NORMAL

Godd Crowd Attend Game Last Friday Evening

The Charlevoix Independent basetball team tucked away another victory last Friday evening, when they took the county normal team into camp by a score of 20 to 17.

The game was a fast one throughout, and was closely fought during the first half, the score being 11 to 10 in favor of the Independents at the end of that period. Jefferies starred for the victors and Miles was the high point winner for the normals. Clean and fast playing featured the contest, which was refereed in an effiicent manner by H. A. Craig. The line-up was as follows:

Hallett	F	Miles
Mayne	F	Bourissau
Jefferies	C	Ikens
Jones	G	Duffy

WHAT IS THIS GULF WATERWAY

population year by year, was all they could possibly handle. They insisted that financing it would exhaust the district's taxing and bonding resources for the next 25 years.

But following the supreme court decision the sanitary district has decided it can do the so-called impossible. It has speeded up its construction program, planning to do in 10 to 15 years whet it formerly had figured on doing in 25 years. It has gained ability to finance by securing from the Illinois legislature an increase in its bonding powers. It is now setting itself as one of its engineers expressed it, "to clean up enough to be decent citizens nnd prevent offensive wastes going down the Illinois valley."

Held Back By Lawyers

The sanitary district probably would have reached this stage long ago if it had not heen so much involved in political intrigue and legal chicanery. Its engineers heve known for years that the district would have to come to treatment disposal plants. But it is said they were hushed up and held beck by lawyers who feared that such admissions would hurt their case in trying to legalize the illegal taking of more than 4,167 c. f. s. of Lake Michigan water for dilution purposes.

This same intrigue and chicanery is operating against the cause of the Lakes-to-the-Gulf waterway. Such a haze of suspicion has been cest over this project—it being known that the sanitary district corps of "workers" and manipulators is active in pushing it, with particular emphasis on the "need of 10,000 c. f. s. from Lake Michigan for navigation purposes"—that interests which naturally might be frendly are inclined to skepticism or active opposition.

Regardless of the many real merits of the Lakes-to-the-Gulf project, there is no doubt that it is being used by the Chicago sanitary district as a lever with which to pry open the legal gates which now stand between Lake Michigan and the diversion of 10,000 cubic feet of water per second through all time to come.

Why District Wants It

Why doea the sanitary district want that 10,000 c. f. s. diversion in perpetuity if it is working for "treatment" disposal in place of "dilution" disposal?

"No trentment method has yet been developed to 100 per cent efficiency. The best is only 85 per cent efficient in purifying sewage. Even when tha present dilution system is superceded by treatment works, the 10,000 c. f. s. from Lake Michigan will be needed to carry away the 15 per cent not disposed of by treatment and also to dilute tbo effluvia from the works.

"Moreover, the 10,000 c. f. s. diversion is necessary to keep the Chicago and Calumet rivers flowing away from Lake Michigan instead of flushing sewega and wastes into the city's water supply when the runoff from heavy rainstorms tends to reverse the current."

And in congress and in other quarters where the "needed for navigation" plea has n particular appeal it is being chanted loudly by the sanitary district's advocates.

Soft Pedal on Power

But the aoft pedal on the subject of water power, though day and night, year in and year out, the turbines in the Lockport powerhouse are busy turning the cnergy of sewage-mixed Lake Michigan water into electricity worth a million or so a year to the sanitary district.

Chicago has a tremendously big joh of sewage disposal on its hands. Chicago, in spite of being handicapped by politicians and parasites, is going at it in a tremendously big way.

Its task would be easier if some atandard method of treatment disposal hed heen worked out. It has no previous undertaking of like size to guide it. So Chicago has been obliged to apend millions in experimentation and is still experimenting.

It has experimented with the development of byproducts, including commercial fertilizer. Its most promising possibility is the production of illumineting and heating gas from the gases given off by sewage in the activated sludge process. It hopes to secure a revenue of $1,000,000 a year from this source in the west side plant alone.

Liko experimentation with wastes from packing houses and corn works have resulted in the development of profitable products that will materially cut down the discharge from these establishments, hitherto among the biggest contributors of sewage. The corn works utilization is said to be revolutionary.

Damned By Its Boosters

The sanitary district has accomplished much. But it undoubtedly would have accomplished far more if it had been unhampered by parasites and lecches. It is the most powerful politicnl machine in Illinois. All through its operations and particularly in the matter of its illegal diversion from Lake Michigan is found the trail of the political trickster, the politicnl manipulator, the political grabber, the political bully.

And now in this lakes-to-theGulf waterway project, with the 10,000 c. f. s. diversion riveted to it, is found this same trail, this same roundabout method of approach, this same tendency to over-claim, this same playing of the game under the table instead of squarely over the top.

The waterway is not helped by the fact that the sanitary district henchmen are shouting "10,000 c. f. s. diversion for navigation," where only yesteryear they were shouting for "10,000 c. f. s. for dilution."

VESPER SERVICE AT METHODIST CHURCH

An Unusual Hour Planned for Next Sabbath Day

Another late afternoon service has been planned for next Sunday nfternoon at 4:15 at the Methodist Episcopal church. It is the wish of the pastor nnd his penple to have nt least one such vesper service each month during the winter season. These will be key note services for the particular month in which they occur. The service next Sunday will stress the thaught of practicing the new year ideals nf the Christian teaching. The features of this service will be a dramatic life sermon, "The Golden Rule in Business," based on the amazing book of that name written by Arthur Nash, the Golden Rule man. A hymn dnmatization rendered by about twenty-five young ladies of Mrs. William Black's Sundny school class, presenting the church marching hymn, "Onwnrd Christinn Soldier." The prayer song of the day will be sung under the lighted cross. The orchestra will assist with this service. No spectal collection will be taken. The usual silver offering will be used for the regular expenses of the church. All nre invited to bring their friends, nnd spend this "Happy Hour" in meditation of this grent message of our Lord, knnwn as the Golden Rule.

PETOSKEY TAXPAYERS PAY FOR MISTAKE

A glaring error made by the county supervisors' committee on apportionment, has resulted in the city of Petoskey being saddled with $12,319.92 school tax in excess of the proper nmount. The committee is composed of Alex. Lark of Center township, Clyde Morford of Resort and F. J. Schmitt, Jr., of the 4th ward of Petoskey.

The costly mistake which occurred in apportioning the amounts to be paid by the city of Petoskey, Resort township and Bear Creek township, forces Petoskey taxpayers to contribute $12,159.09 of Bear Creek township's share nnd $160.83 for Resort. In other words, while the proper amount of school tax has been raised, the proportions of the three contributing sources have been badly bungled and to the $12,319.92 disadvantage of the city taxpayers.

Examinations of the records at the court house disclosed that committee members Lark, Morford and Schmitt certified to the figures which stung Petoskey with the twelve thousand-odd dollnrs.

CITY BAND ELECT OFFICERS FOR YEAR

Organization Had Successful Year With Efforts Appreciated

At a meeting held in the court house on Monday evening of this week, the Charlevoix city hnnd reviewed their activities throughout the pnst summer and elected the following officers for the ensuing year:

President—S. O. Sorenson.
Secretary—Will Bellinger.
Treasurer—John Wagner.

The bnnd has had a very successful year. It has filled in an efficient manner a need that has been evident in the community for snme years past, the large crowds which attended each concert given last summer testifying to that fact. It is to be hoped that they will continue their organization for the coming summer and hnve the liberal support that has been granted them in the past.

NEW PALACE THEATRE
ATTRACTIONS FOR THE COMING WEEK

Saturday and Sunday, January 16th and 17th

George O'Brien and Jacqueline Logan in "THANK YOU." Among hundreds of letters praising "Thank You" was the following from the Hon. Newton D. Baker, former Secretary of War: "Thank You" is a wholesome, helpful, sweet, spirited play. The interest is sustained throughout.

We will also have a Lloyd Hamilton comedy, "Half a Hero." These comedies are bound to drive away the blues.

Also another educational picture, "The Benefactor." These educational pictures should be seen by all. They will give you a greater insight to the industries of the world.

BRER FOX MADE HIS GET-A-WAY

EXCITING HUNT STAGED ON NORWOOD BEACH

Sly Old Red Back Still in Jungle Chuckling Over Antics of His Pursuers

One day last week when the sun was shining over the beautiful white snow and everything was quiet and still—in fact all nature seemed in harmony—a typical day for a fox hunt. Yet the hunters had not planned this hunting bee. Six men with dogs and guns seemed to meet on the Norwood beach. Hunting northward they met the four other hunters from Charlevoix with their dogs and guns.

Now, it seemed to fall to the lot of Plenny Genette and his well-bred fox hound to start Mr. Fox. This they were not long doing, all trained and untrained dogs joining in the chase and following the fox over the sand hills, in and out along the icy bench, until near evening when Sam Alward said: It's no use, fellows, we are in the wrong place." So in despair they broke up and returned to their respective homes, leaving the dogs hot on the trail of the fox.

During the evening amusing conversations were carried on over the telephone. One hunter calls another and here are a few choice hits of the talk carried on:

"We would have got that fox if Mont Withers would only have muffled his voice a trifle. He resembled a loud speaker on a radio and the fox heard him and changed his course."

Another party said: "If Ise Dice would have left his little rabbit dog at home instead of putting him on a fox track to muddle it up for the other dogs to work out, we would have had a better chance at him."

Another's version: "If Doc Newman would not have been out with ao many 'Mike' dogs and if Dick Kirby's dog was as good a hunter as Dick, our chances would have been better."

Another voice chips in: "If Nick Alward would train his dogs to be dogs instead of pups, it would have helped some."

And so on the conversation followed. Broadcasted from another point this came over the wire: "John Slezak watched and paced the beach as though he was demonstrating the proper use of a pair of hiking boots."

Little was said about Ise Alward, known among hunters as "Stillfoot," as he was a neighborhood visitor. Another member of the party, Ralph Bacol, was as interested as though he was on the sharp look-out for taxi cab passengers during the resort season.

These are a few reasons and excuses used by party members for not getting the sly old fox.—Contributed.

PICKLES PROVE A GOOD CASH CROP

Prize Winners Announced for Season of 1925

The last week in the old year brought some pleasant surprises to the growers of The Charlevoix Pickle & Produce Company when letters announcing prizes in gold and best yields went out to every one of the contracted growers—numbering well over the 300 mark.

The fortunate prize winners in the growing of cucumbers the past year, together with yields secured and prizes awarded, were as follows:

First, $20 in gold awarded to John Hoffman who led with a cash yield from his cucumber crop of $251.06 per acre. Second, $15 in gold awarded to James Vanderheide whose yield was $213.60 per acre. Third, $10 in gold awarded to James S. Houts whose yield of $213.44 per acre followed the second winner closely. And fourth, $5 in gold awarded to Herman Poll, whose cucumbers netted him a cash return of $208.21 per acre.

In addition to those four prize winners, the letters listed almost a hundred farmers whose net cash income from the crop ranged well up into high totals quite near the leaders, many ranging between $100 and $200 per acre. Yields such as these being paid in spot cash as the crop was delivered and while other crops were still growing, served as a substantial source of ready money during August and September.

The company this year operated stations at Atwood, Charlevoix, Horton Bay and Petoskey and in spite of the early drought in this region of Michigan, the intake of cucumbers was a fairly heavy one.

NEW NORMAL SITE HAS BEEN CHOSEN

Location Not to Be Announced Until Later Date

Nothing will be done toward building the proposed new state normal school in the northern portion of central Michigan until the Central Michigan state normal at Mount Pleasant, which recently was destroyed by fire, is rebuilt, Thomas E. Johnson, state superintendent of public instruction, announced Saturday.

Location of the new normal school has been decided on by the board, Johnson announced. It will not be announced until after funds have been appropriated for rebuilding the Mount Pleasant school, the superintendent added.

Because of the financial situation involved in the destruction of the Mount Pleasant institution, Johnson declared the board of education will ask the governor to call an early special session of the legislature to take action on the whole problem. It is thought the special session if called will convene some time early next month.

LIBRARY AND SEWING CLUB BANQUET

Annual Affair Held in Church Parlors Friday

An annual Methodist event in Charlevoix is the banquet of the Literary and Sewing Club of the Methodist Episcopal church. The ladies invited their husbands for this occasion last Friday, January eighth, and it was their outstanding club event for the month. The ladies met in the afternoon at the church for their annual business meeting and election of officers, which resulted as follows:

Mrs. Arthur Edwards, president.
Mrs. F. M. Partridge, vice president.
Mrs. Laura Courier, secretary.
Mrs. Ethel Sands, treasurer.

At six-thirty, about sixty sat down to the bountiful tables. A program followed the supper, some features of which were:

Piano solo, Cecile Louise Pollock.
Readings, Mrs. Edward Stewart, assisted at the piano by Mrs. Stout.
Male Quartette, "The Harmony Four."
Readings, Miss Lucille Belding.

A very pleasing part of the program was the presentation of a bouquet of carnations to Rev. and Mrs. C. E. Pollock, with kindly words of appreciation from Mrs. Laura Courier. Mr. Pollock responded with humor, and appreciation of the value of such an organization as a young ladies' club in the church. Rev. and Mrs. Pollock then supervised the fun and games program of the evening, and everyone had a place in the festivities. The club is planning some very important achievements for the new year.

BAIRD AFTER FIRE WARDENS

SEVERAL DISTRICT OFFICIALS GET THE SACK

Charged With Including Small Grass Fires and Whatnots to Make Good Showing

An extensive shake up of the state department of conservation because of forest fire showing by the department was ordered by Commissioner Baird Friday. It included Charles H. Peterson from office work and dismissal or demotion of five of the 15 district wardens in the fire belt.

Baird declared Friday that Peterson's report, showing 725,000 acres burned in 1925 with suppression cost of $126,042 is misleading and that the report is generally unsatisfactory.

H. J. Andrews, head of the land economic division, has been placed in charge of office work in the fire warden's office and Peterson will devote all his time to field work. It was indicated a new report would be prepared to include $227,035, spent by the department for fire prevention at administration expense.

Figures in Peterson's report include amounts paid for drafted labor in the fire zone. The report will also eliminate small grass fires, camp fires and other inconsiderable factors in the report.

Complaint is made district wardens included many small fires in reports to lower the average cost of fire suppression and make a better showing. Among the wardens effected by the ouster are:

Thomas L. Bryant, of Pellston, was relieved of his duties as warden of district number 8. Chas. H. Welsh of Gaylord, discharged as warden of district number 9.

CLASS HOUR HELD AT MRS. STELTER'S

Musical Program Creditably Given By Children

On the afternoon of Saturday, January 9th, the home of Mrs. Albert Stelter was filled with pupils and their mothers eager to hear the program of the first class hour of the new year. One purpose in thus holding class hours is to develop poise in the pupils when playing before others. Besides, lasting benefit is derived from the increased knowledge of musical literature and the intimate sidelights into the lives of great composers, which are brought out in a most interesting and original fashion in the remarks introducing each number by the pupils.

The program, each number of which was creditably performed, was as follows:

Plow Under Residues to Help Fertility

Supply of Organic Matter Is Very Essential.

Don't rake off or burn the trash left on the fields after the crop is harvested. Plow it under. It contains plant food of a value from $5 to $15 per acre and will increase crop yields the following year.

"Even where we use summer and winter legumes for soil improvement, the main crops have a larger acreage and therefore the cover crops planted are not sufficient to maintain the supply of organic matter," says W. F. Pate, fertility agronomist at the North Carolina State college. "This being the case, it is necessary to plow under the crop residues such as corn stalks, cotton stalks, tobacco stalks, peanut vines, grasses and other vegetative matter. This will help to keep up the supply of organic matter."

Professor Pate states that the system of farming generally practiced in North Carolina tends to deplete the amount of organic matter in the soil. This causes the soils to wash and the crops to suffer under abnormal growing seasons as a late cold spring, too little rain or too much rain. In most cases, where a soil has yielded smaller crops from year to year, the reason can be found in that the supply of organic matter has not been maintained. Then, in nearly all cases where the soil is increasing in crop producing power, the supply of organic matter is increasing.

"Years ago when our farming implements were crude or inadequate, there was some reason for burning the crop residues but not now," says Professor Pate. "With heavy plows, disk harrows and tractors available, it is a crime not to turn under these valuable crop residues. By practicing fall and winter plowing, the crop residues, sometimes called trash, will be completely incorporated into the soil and no trouble will be had in the spring in preparing a good seedbed."

Bad Housing Conditions Cause Various Diseases

Colds of poultry which are similar in many respects to the colds of the human family, should be regarded critically as they may be the forerunner of more serious trouble, such as nasal or ocular roup, diphtheria or birdpox.

Poor housing conditions cause many flocks to acquire colds, especially in the fall. Chicks should be trained to roost as soon as possible, as this allows a circulation of air around their bodies. Dampness in houses should be particularly avoided. Chickens that do not have sufficient feed or the proper kind of food acquire colds easily. A balanced ration consisting of approximately equal parts of mash and grains, supplemented with plenty of succulent green feeds, is one of the best preventatives.

In preventing colds from developing into more serious trouble, where whole flocks are affected due to exposure, it is often advisable to administer epsom salts at the rate of 1 to 1½ pounds to 100 adult birds, say poultry men at the Kansas State Agricultural college.

Unsanitary pens as compared with clean ones result in a death loss of 35 per cent, experiments conducted by the Kansas State Agricultural college show. Proper sanitation includes all measures that are conducive to good health, but is probably more considered in connection with the cleanliness of houses, yards, runs and general quarters as well as the feeding and drinking utensils it also includes the control of both internal and external parasites.

Fall Is Best Time for Spreading Ground Lime

The fall of the year is usually the best time for the hauling and spreading of ground limestone. The stubble fields are usually hard and the roads mostly good and the field work not so pressing as in the spring. Some farmers have used hydrated lime at the rate of about 200 pounds to the acre and received good results with it. Where the haul is long from the railroad siding, this type of lime treatment for soil is worth trying, because of the reduction of labor. Some men have hauled the crushed limestone in contractor dumping trucks and then dumped the ground limestone at the end of the fill and then spread with a lime spreader.

Farm Hints

Frequent cutting tends to kill out alfalfa.

In one year eggs and chickens worth $1,047,323,170 were produced in the United States.

Gophers "played possum" during the dry weather but are making the dirt fly since the fall rains started.

Seed corn should be selected in the field from healthy, erect and well-matured plants. Place the ears in a well-ventilated place for drying.

Field selection of good seed corn should be attended to. If the work is well done, no other farm operation will pay a bigger dividend.

JUST A FRIENDLY LETTER
From the office of CHARLEVOIX HARDWARE COMPANY

January 11, 1926

To the People of Charlevoix the Beautiful:

Having today assumed active command of the CHARLEVOIX HARDWARE COMPANY, I feel it is a pleasure as well as my duty to announce to the many friends and customers of this establishment that the splendid policies and principles which that organization has always followed, will remain unchanged. Of course, it is natural to improve and progress, and as time goes on, we will constantly make such improvements and additions as are consistent with good business.

It will be our aim and desire to co-operate with you in every way possible, and we want you to feel free at all times to call upon us with your problems. Your troubles are our troubles, your pleasures are our pleasures, and we want to share them both. It is the spirit of friendliness and whole-hearted co-operation that will aid us all in continuing to make Charlevoix the most neighborly and ideal place to live in.

I am indeed proud to have the privilege of conducting so fine an institution as The Charlevoix Hardware Company, of which there is no doubt ranks as one of the finest and most up-to-date hardware stores in northern Michigan.

I want to say too, at this time, that I am favorably impressed with CHARLEVOIX, and I KNOW I am going to like it, and it's friendly citizens.

Come in folks and let's shake hands and get acquainted. I want to be one of you.

Very sincerely yours,
Lester A. Cannon, Gen'l Mgr.

BASKETEERS WIN OPENING GAME

DEFEAT MANCELONA ON THEIR OWN COURT

Mancelona had a very small floor with posts in the center and sides which made it look as tho things were going to be decidedly against C. H. S. Mancelona has been practicing since before the holidays and have played a number of games thereby having another jump on C. H. S. But inspite of all this the fellows determined to bring home the game regardless of obstacles and went into the game with increased fight.

Right from the beginning it was very evident the game was going to be nip and tuck and so it was till the final whistle.

Shortly after the whistle at the beginning of the game a personal foul was called on Mancelona and Brown opened the scoring by making the shot. Then Mancelona followed with a field goal making the score 2 to 1 for Mancelona. Charlevoix then came right back and Brown again scored a field goal from the center of the floor, making the count 3 to 2 for C. H. S. Angell for Mancelona made another counter from the field making the score 4 to 3. This ended the half, Mancelona leading at this time, 4 to 3.

All during the first half the C. H. S. boys were playing together and passing the ball," very little dribbling being attempted which caused uneasiness for Mancelona. Every fellow was working hard and sure.

At the beginning of the second half Mancelona was again fouled for holding with Davenport making the shot evening up up the score 4-all. C. H. S. was called for holding and Maney made the point, the score 5 to 4, which was soon followed by holding by for Mancey. Under shooting the foul this time, evening up the score 5-all.

At this point Mancelona opened up and shot two field goals in quick succession making the score 9 to 5 for Mancelona.

But that only lasted a few minutes when Davenport let lose with two field goals, one being on a follow in shot that was a nice one. This tied the score again 9-all. There was then only about 1 1-2 minutes left to play and things were getting desperate when Harrington let loose of one from the center of the floor for a basket making the score 11 to 9 for C. H. S. This basket was made with only 30 seconds to play and C. H. S. kept the ball well down the floor till time was up. C. H. S. winning a hard fought game.

This game being the first game for C. H. S. was more of an experiment, but it proved that C. H. S. has a team this is going to make things interesting for the opposition. Coach Alldread has found in Higman and Winder, at guards two men that will cause a lot of trouble to forwards especially in making shots from follow in as both of these boys are going up in the air after the ball from the back board. The coach is well pleased to see the way these two boys worked in the Maney game.

In Capt. Brown at center the opposing center is going to have a tough job getting away with plays and Brownie from all indications will make things interesting when he gets near the basket in possession of the ball.

Harrington and Davenport, two men that are tall and fast are working at forwards. Both are developing a dead eye for the basket and are following their shots to a good advantage as was shown at Mancelona.

Coach Alldread is working hard on offensive trying to develop a good scoring combination and when he has perfected this will spend a great deal of time on defense for opposing teams.

USEFUL LIFE COMES TO CLOSE

MRS. KATE GALBRAITH DIES IN CONNEAUT, OHIO

Passing Ends Illness Which Started Last April—Had Lived Here for 45 Years

The long and useful life of Mrs. Kate Galbraith passed out last Friday, January 15, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Anna Emrey, of Conneaut, Ohio, after a considerable period of ill health lasting since last April.

Mrs. Galbraith was 69 years old at the time of her death, having been born in Elmira, N.Y., August 22, 1857. She moved from there Jacksonport, Wisconsin, with her parents and was married in that city to Dougal Galbraith in 1877. The couple came to Michigan 45 years ago, settling on a farm near Ironton, where they made their home up until the death of Mr. Galbraith, which occurred some 23 years ago. Deceased was the mother of two children, one daughter, Mrs. Anna Emrey of Conneaut, Ohio, and one son, John Galbraith, who resides in California.

After the death of her husband, Mrs. Galbraith moved to Charlevoix, where she has since made her home. Her life in this city was one of self sacrifice and devotion to her many friends. Many is the home where her encouraging words and helping hand has cemented a place for herself in their hearts which no power will ever remove. It may be truly said that self sacrifice deepened, refined and exalted her soul into a rare and beautiful character so that to know her well made life sweeter and better. We cannot speak too highly of her and join our sorrow with that of her many friends in the departure of one greatly loved from our midst.

The body was brought to this city Tuesday afternoon and funeral services were held at 10:30 Wednesday morning from the Congregational church, Rev. B. G. Mattson officiating. Interment at Brookside.

LOCAL MOOSE LODGE ENTERTAINS FRIENDS

About Thirty Couples Enjoy Evening of Dancing

About thirty couples, members of the Local Moose lodge and their friends, enjoyed an evening of fun at their hall in the Paddock building on Monday night of this week.

The hall was crowded to capacity and, after an excellent supper which was highly praised by the fortunate ones in attendance, the remainder of the evening was spent in dancing, card playing and visiting. Members were unanimous in calling the party a success and are looking forward to other events of like nature in the future.

The Rebekah Circle will give a ten cent at the home of Mrs. Wm. C. Taylor, 403 Dixon avenue, Friday, January 22. All are invited.—Adv. 3t1.

NOT ONLY SUMMER RESORT BUT WINTER RESORT

Frederick W. Abricht of Hessel, wrote the other day a paean of rapturous praise of the climate of northern Michigan. He pitied Detroit, one day shivering in a temperature of nine above, the next itching in its flannels as the mercury soared to 40 and the streets ran with a combination of melted snow and mud. In Hessel it was 35 below zero, and nobody was cold.

Mr. Abricht has put his finger on a fact that somebody some day is going to capitalize. Northern Michigan is not only a summer resort; it has a winter climate that beats Switzerland's. New York discovered that the Adirondacks are a fine place to visit in winter, to rest and recuperate. The cold fresh air is great for ailments of the respiratory organs and the well can find delight in all manner of winter sports. The climate of our own north is just as bracing; the woods are just as aromatic; the skating and sliding are just as good, and in many places there are hills just waiting for the skiiers.

One of these days some syndicate will find a winter resort in northern Michigan. It will erect a big hotel, and advertise it to the red-blooded, and too, the health seekers as well. It will make its appeal not only to sportsmen, but to the tired business man whose lungs are carbonized and whose muscles are flabby. It will show him how to regain his pep.—Detroit News.

THEME WAS "THE GOLDEN RULE"

KEY NOTES OF VESPER SERVICE HELD SUNDAY

Another Highly Appreciated Sunday Afternoon Service Held at the M. E. Church

A crowded auditorium of people assembled last Sunday afternoon for the Key Note Vesper Service, which had been announced for 4:15 p. m. The theme of the afternoon was, "The Golden Rule." An opening voluntary was rendered by the orchestra, that also assisted with the choral singing and was much appreciated. The evening prayer hymn was an old favorite of the church, and was sung under the light of the electric cross, the entire congregation entering into the devotional spirit of the song. A special selection by the choir was well rendered.

The sermon was based on Matthew, seventh chapter and twelfth verse, which is commonly known as "The Golden Rule." The pastor illustrated his sermon by telling certain of the interesting facts from the life of Mr. Arthur Nash, author of a book entitled, "The Golden Rule In Business." This man made three discoveries in his relation to this theme. First among them was this, that no one church organization has any monopoly on the Christianity of the New Testament. Next he found that the Golden Rule, when faithfully applied to business, would make a business man happy and wealthy, above what any other business system could achieve. Finally he found that war, human wretchedness and criminality were not evidences of the failure of Christianity in the world, but were signs that the world have found Christianity difficult and had not tried it. Wherever and whenever the pure teachings of Christianity had been put into practice, the world had been blessed and humanity had been uplifted and made happy.

The key note appeal of the pastor was a plea to put into practice the Sermon on the Mount, and particularly that portion of it known as the Golden Rule. He closed his sermon by saying that the great marching hymn of the church is, "Onward Christian Soldiers." He said that we must, however, be careful where we place the emphasis in this hymn. There has been too much emphasis placed on the word "Soldier" and too little on the word "Christian." The whole spirit of the hymn is missed unless it is clearly understood that the hymn is to be interpreted in the light of the Golden Rule and the Sermon on the Mount.

As he spoke the final words, "Let us keep step with this marching hymn of the church," the orchestra played the hymn and it was beautifully rendered by song and pantomime by a score of girls dressed in white, carrying beautiful Christian flags, assisted by Miss Edna Brown who carried a cross, and the orchestra that played the hymn. Miss Anne Siminow was the reader who gave a sketch of the composition and meaning of the hymn. This closing feature of the service was delightfully rendered, and much credit for its success is due Mrs. William Block and Mrs. George Russell, who directed its rendition. Another key note service is planned for the month of February.

WHAT IS THIS GULF WATERWAY

ILLINOIS PLAN OF BIG CONCERN TO ALL MICHIGAN

No. 3

(By Arthur W. Stace.)

You who would cruise to Florida by inland water;

You who would cut your freight rates on coming and going shipments;

Harken to this:

Lakes to gulf navigation for river barges for packets, for lake pleasure craft—is within 60 miles of realization.

It is not dependent upon a flow from Lake Michigan up to the full amount of 10,000 cubic feet per second.

It's Up to Illinois

It is dependent alone upon the ability of the state of Illinois to finish a job to which it has set itself—a job for which it long ago voted a bond issue, a job which already is well under way, a job that can be finished within four years unless mischievous political trickery tangles things up.

This job is the construction of the Illinois State waterway, from the end of the Chicago Drainage canal at Lockport to the head of Illinois river navigation near Utica.

Illinois has been fussing over this waterway so long that it is no wonder the rest of the world and many persons in the state itself have come to regard it as a demagogic myth, an alluring spellbinder's fantasy conjured up only for campaign purposes and forgotten after election. But as a matter of fact actual construction work has been going on for five years.

Old Canal and New

It parallels the DesPlaines and Illinois rivers from Joliet to LaSalle, following the north shore and taking several cut-offs instead of utilizing the river beds. This was because of tow path necessities in former times, boats being operated by mule power.

It has 15 locks, 16 feet wide by 100 feet long with a capacity of 110 tons per lock and is still usable by small craft.

The canal paid for itself in 22 years from tolls. From 1860 to 1915 it carried 74,000,000 tons of freight and saved the people of Illinois $185,000,000 in freight rates. It once saved the credit of the state.

It competed successfully with the railroads until 1882, when its capacity was outgrown by increased transportation needs.

Visions of a Ship-Canal

Seventeen years ago, in 1908, the people of Illinois voted to bond themselves for $20,000,000 to construct a deep waterway and power development in the DesPlaines and Illinois rivers. At that time they had visions of a ship canal like Panama or Suez, with ocean steamships and huge lake freighters sailing majestically across the corn belt and along the Mississippi bearing bulk.

Uncle Sam's practical-headed engineers shattered these visions with an array of hard facts and figures which demonstrated how imposible the ship canal project was on a basis of costs and results. These facts and figures concerned largely conditions on the erratic and untractable Mississippi hundreds of miles below the Illinois State waterway. Then the planners swung to the opposite extreme and proposed a project that would have locks only 55 feet wide and 250 feet long. The legislature of 1915 appropriated $5,000,000 to begin work on this but again the government engineers applied for test of practicability in view of modern navigation needs and conditions and the second project was likewise rejected.

Engineer from U. of M.

Then in 1917 Gov. Frank O. Lowden came into office. Under his administration Moritmer G. Barnes, a waterway engineer of broad experience was called in to review the situation and recommend a workable waterway plan that would satisfy both the people of Illinois and the federal government engineers. Engineer Barnes is a graduate of the University of Michigan. His experience has included active work on such projects as the Poe lock and

Charlevoix County Contributes $37,186.00 for Privilege of Operating Cars and Trucks

(By Ed. A. Nowack) There are 2848 pleasure cars, 331 commercial autos, seven motorcycles, 22 licensed trailers and 11 automobile dealers in Charlevoix county according to the statewide automobile census released by Charles J. DeLand, secretary of state, for 1925. That county contributed a total of $37,186.00 into the auto license and weight tax fund of which $16,739.00 was returned to the county as its share of state award money due on the basis of a six million dollar apportionment.

Total 1925 receipts in DeLand's office amount to $29,169,098. Ten months of the gas tax returned $8,019,083. The corporation division earned $6,529,235. In addition to handling almost 30 millions last year DeLand's force in December took in over two millions in auto license fees for 1926.

Used Autos Exceed New

John M. Haller, chief of the title division in Secretary of State DeLand's office says there were 317,852 used automobiles sold in Michigan last year. He is the boy who keeps complete check on all title provisions of the auto laws. His 1925 report shows 259,600 new titles issued, a few of them being for cars brought in from other states.

Carelessness Costs Fortune

Michigan auto owners last year carelessly laid away 24,831 titles and that means, says Secretary of State DeLand, that it cost these careless folks $24,831, plus time and postage, to replace them. DeLand says the title is to the automobile what the deed is to real estate and should be as carefully guarded.

BAND CONCERT NEXT WEDNESDAY EVENING

To Be Given in Parlors of Baptist Church

The Charlevoix city band will give a concert at the Baptist church, next Wednesday evening, January 27th, to which the public is cordially invited.

The program will consist of band selections, solo numbers by members of the organization and a number of vocal solos. This concert is to be an annual affair from now on and will be staged during some month each winter. Proceeds from the evening's entertainment are to be turned over to the band and used in maintaining their organization. It is for a very good cause, so let's turn out and give the band boys our support.

POLLUTION OF WATERS BANNED

BOARD TO SERVE NOTICE ON ALL VIOLATORS SOON

Hearings Now under Way To Determine Conditions And Fix Time Limits

Industrial plants, disposing of waste directly into lakes or rivers, will soon be called in by the state department of health and conservation and told to start plans for disposal plants as soon as municipal hearings are completed, Homer Murphy, steam pollution expert of the conservation department announced last week.

Hearings Now On

The department is holding weekly hearings for each of the six drainage districts of lower Michigan, at which municipal sewage problems are discussed and the cities notified to start plans for disposal plants with six months.

Following completion of the city hearings, offending manufacturers in each district will be notified to appear and notice of their time allowance in which to clean up will be given, the length of time depending on the nature of the industry and the size of the plant, Murphy said. In most cases, court proceedings are threatened if the warnings are not heeded.

Completion of the lower peninsula hearing is expected by April and the attention of the conservation department will then be turned to the upper peninsula.

Law Has Teeth

The dream of Michigan conservationists—to restore the unpolluted conditions of lakes and rivers—will be an actuality with in a few years, state department of health and department of conservation officials declare.

Before the end of the present year, every city in the state now disposing of waste by running sewers into the lakes or rivers will have definite plans for a municipal reduction plant or will feel the "teeth" of the law enacted by the 1925 legislature, designed to perpetuate the national beauty of Michigan inland waters.

The act on which the clean-up warning is based passed with little attention during the legislative session last year. It simply provides that municipalities ordered to construct reduction plants, can, on issuance of an injunction at request of the state health department, issue bonds without popular approval.

The measure was advanced as a public health necessity following refusal of voters in some cities to approve reduction plant bonds after injunctions had been issued. But it has been unlawful in the state for years for a city or industry to dump raw sewage into rivers and the state now proposes to use the new statute to force a general program for cleaning up Michigan waterways.

May Take 20 Years

The time allotted to municipalities to make plans for sewage disposal is six months. But the entire program of the state will take at least 20 years before it is completed. Small cities and industries will be required to clean up within a few years but larger industries and municipalities will be given more time to work out necessarily complicated problems.

State authorities unite in declaring municipal pollution is more important in general than industrial pollution.

YOUNG FOLKS GUESTS AT BIRTHDAY PARTY

Leona Smith Entertains Friends at Card Party

Miss Leona Smith entertained fourteen of her young friends last Saturday evening, January 16, the party being in honor of Ardean Davenport's birthday anniversary.

The guests spent the evening playing bunco and cards. Miss Ina Genett carried off high honors for the ladies and Ted Cooper was the lucky man, carrying off the men's first prize. At midnight, dainty refreshments were served and the young people went to their homes declaring Miss Smith a very genial hostess.

OFFICERS ELECTED AT METHODIST CHURCH

Departments Heads Are Chosen to Carry on Work

At a regular called meeting of the Sunday School Board of the Methodist Episcopal church, the following officers were elected for the new year:

Superintendent, William Black.

Assistant Superintendent, Archie Belding.

Secretary, Miss Dorothy Hooker

Enrollment secretary, Miss Dorothy Ikens.

Treasuer, Charles Arnold.

Librarian and board secretary, Orson J. Evarts.

Supt. Primary Dept., Mrs. Leaiah Simmons.

Supt. Cradle Roll, Miss Jennie Black.

Supt. Home Dept., Mrs. C. E. Pollock.

Supt. of Missions, Mrs. Ada Beeman.

Supt Temperance, Mrs. Charles Arnold.

Director of Orchestra, William Bellinger.

Chorister, Claude Greenway.

Assistant Chorister, Earl Shapton.

This election was held at the church last Thursday evening and the new officers entered upon their duties with a large Sunday school in attendance, last Sunday. It is planned to begin the Sunday school at twelve o'clock from this time on through the year. The orchestra will begin to play as soon as possible after the morning worship. Some very progressive work is being planned for the school.

AT THE MOVIES

"Durand of Bad Lands"

Buck Jones, William Fox cowboy star, whose latest western picture, "Durand of the Bad Lands," which opens at the Palace Theatre, next Saturday and Sunday, is described as being the best of his career, is the possessor of a most varied assortment of weapons—of all sizes, kinds and descriptions.

Buck's hobby dates back to his days on the range when he commenced accumulating "six-gun"—the first of which now holds an honored niche in his elaborate gun-case. Each year on the range, through years in the Army, then with wild west shows, and finally in the "movies"—brought several odd additions to the collection. With the rise of Buck to fame, his "hobby" assumed more auspicious proportions as modern rifles, shotguns, pistols and other arms augmented his unique group.

"The Golden Strain"

Kenneth Harlan, playing opposite Madge Bellamy in "The Golden Strain," Fox Films version of Peter B. Kayne's gripping story, proved to the officers and enlisted men at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., that he can ride at the head of the pack—even with the crack members of the Tenth Cavalry at his flank—and still give an excellent account of himself.

Harlan, who saw active service with Kyne in France, is one of those fellows who scorn a double and insists upon getting his full share of the thrills while engaged in making picutres. He can ride a horse—and he loves it. At the Palace Theatre, Wednesday, January 27th.

Lloyd Hamilton in Good Comedy

One of the most popular stars in short comedies, Lloyd Hamilton of Educational-Hamilton comedies, will be seen in his latest two reel comedy. "Waiting" will present the big next Saturday and Sunday.

"Waiting" will present the big comedian in one of the funniest roles of the season—that of a small town boy who gets a job as a dish-washer and later as a waiter in a big city cafe.

EDGAR SMITH MOVES TO NEW QUARTERS

Bourissau Restaurant Will Occupy Madison Building

Edgar Smith started on Monday morning of this week to move his stock and fixtures into the south half of the new County Bank building and is now nicely settled in his new quarters.

Prior to moving, fixtures and cases were newly varnished and everything presents a neat and tidy appearnce in the new building. Pearl's barber shop will occupy a part of the store as before. Louis Bourissau will move his restaurant into the building vacated by Smith, probably the next week or so.

SNOW REMOVAL IS APPROVED

State Will Spend More Than $150,000 in Opening Roads

Snow removal on the principal trunk lines of the northern part of lower Michigan was given final approval by the state administrative board Thursday. The project involves expenditure, totaling more than $150,000.

Roads to be opened are highways 10, 11, 13 and 14, from the present snow line to the straits and roadways between Midland and Clare and Gladwin. Work will probably begin the first of next month.

The plan was advanced by Governor Groesbeck as an experiment to determine whether it is practical to keep northern roads open during the winter. Most of the cost this year will be for purchase of snow removal equipment and the work done in succeeding years will be done for materially less.

To carry out the plan, the state highway department has been authorized to purchase 14 truck plows, three heavy V-plows and 10 rotary plows which are necessary to remove the drifts of snow experienced in the north. Twelve ten-ton tractors will have to be purchased to run the plows. Trucks for the light ploys will be rented.

FAMINE WAS SHORT LIVED FOR FORDS

Florida Freight Embargo Has Little Effect on Delivery

When the railroad embargo descended upon Floridu, delivery of automobiles into that state were seriously curtailed. As far as Ford cars were concerned, however, the famine was short-lived for two Ford freighters were pressed into service and shiploads of cars rushed to the two principal centers of population for distribution.

The Oneida now operates a regular schedule between the New Orleans branch of the Ford Motor Company of Tampa, carrying about 250 cars at a load and completing a round trip every five dnys. On the east coast, another ship, delivers cars from the Jacksonville branch to Miami at about the same rate.

Cars are completely assembled at the branches before londing and when the ships arrived at the Florida ports, the cars are hoisted from the hold and swing over on to the dock where they are ready for delivery to dealers.

Every Ford owner should have a Koolfast radiator on his car. Hundreds have made the change. We have them. Benj. Brown.—Adv. 49tf.

LICENSE TAX RECEIPTS BIG

State's Revenue Totals $14,526,101 For Last Year, Reports Shows

Total automobile license receipts for 1925 were $14,526,101, according to the annual report of Secretary of State Charles J. DeLand, made public last Thursday. The new tax used last year brought more than two million dollars more revenue than the old tax, based on weight and horse power.

The weight tax alone brought $13,356,446. Titles issued at $1 each totaled $616,858, and petty fees yielded $552,677.

Of the total amount, six million dollars go to the counties of the state in proportion to the amount of license money taken in each county.

Allotment for Charlevoix county is $16,739.45; Cheboygan, $11,726.58; Emmet county, $19,091.12; Wexford county, $21,111.35.

OLD RESIDENT DIED AT HOME IN DETROIT

Henry O'Leary Was Resident Here for Twenty Years

Henry O'Leary, a resident of this city for some twenty years, died last Wednesday, January 13, at the home of his daughter, Elena, in Detroit, where he had been making his home for the past two years.

Mr. O'Leary was born in Painsville, Ohio, in 1856, and was around 70 years of age at the time of his death. His early life was spent at the place of his birth and from there he moved to this city, where he resided about 20 years. During his residence here he run a livery stable at the corner of Bridge street and Belvedere avenue for a great many years and was well and favorably known to residents of this city.

Deceased is survived by two daughters, Elena and Mary, both of Detroit, his wife and one son, Henry, Jr., having passed away before him. Funeral services and burial were held last Saturday, Junurry 16th, at his old home in Painsville, Ohio.

CHARLEVOIX MASONIC BUILDING ASSOCIATION

Annual Meeting Held Tuesday Evening in Local Temple

The annual meeting of the Charlevoix Masonic Building Association was held Tuesday evening in the Masonic Temple, some one hundred and fifty members being present. Oluf Nordrum was re-elected chairman, as also were Messrs. Robert Bridge, Dr. F. H. Wilkinson and L. E. Benton, trustees. Elmer Ingalls was chosen as third member of the auditing committee.

The report read by Secretary-Treasurer D. S. Payton showed that the affairs of the association were in excellent shape, and the association's indebtedness was being paid off as fast as possible.

The ladies of the Eastern Star served one of their excellent suppers, and are to be complimented on the manner in which they handled the hungry crowd. After the supper and business session were concluded, the evening was spent in cards, dancing and a general good time.

St. Mary's river improvement at Sault Ste. Marie, the Birmingham-waterway in Alabama, investigation of proposed U. S. deep waterway in New York, construction of Illinois-Mississippi canal, construction of Moline locks, design of Panama canal locks and enlargement of the New York State barge canal.

Mr. Barnes was made chief engineer of the Illinois division of waterways. He formulated the waterway plan which finally has been adopted by the state and approved by the federal government.

Canalize Two Rivers

This plan calls for the canalization of the DesPlaines and Illinois rivers from Lockport to near Utica. Slack water navigation is to be obtained by means of four dams. Five locks are to be constructed. The channel bottom width is to be at least 200 feet and the depth at least 8 feet. The locks are to be 600 feet long and 110 feet wide and be capable of the passage of cargoes of from 7,000 to 9,000 tons in one lockage, these representing barge fleets of economic size. The locks nre so designed that if future needs demand the deepening of the waterway the channel can be made 14 feet. Four powerhouses, to develop 75,000 horsepower, are part of the project.

"Experience in transportation on highways, railways and waterways has shown that the cost of transportation varies inversely to the load transported," says Engineer Barnes. "The construction of waterways the world over has shown that they have been built too small or at least the business nttracted to the waterways has outgrown their accommodations. Federal engineers have realized this in planning for the improvement of the Ohio river, in which they have designed locks 110 feet wide and of 600 feet usable length. This is the same size as the locks of the Illinois state waterway.

Locks to Handle Barge Fleets

"The Illinois waterway is to be broad and of medium draft to meet the natural conditions of the streams to be utilized and the locks are designed to accommodate barge fleets of large tonnage."

In comparison it may be stated the New York state barge canal—the old Erie—has a minimum width of 75 feet in earth section and 94 feet in rock sections and a minimum depth of 12 feet. Locks are 310 feet long and 45 feet wide.

Engineer Barnes' plan was adopted by the Illinois legislature in 1919 and the first contract, that for the Marseilles lock, was awarded in October, 1920. This job has been finished, the only part of the project thus far completed. Another lock, that at Lockport, is 65 per cent completed. The two will take $3,000,000 out of the $20,000,000 authorized. And there, so far as actual construction is concerned, is the Illinois Stnte waterway today.

But preliminary work is well advanced and bids for two more locks and two dams, those at Brandon Road pool and Starved Rock, together with work in Joliet, will be opened on January 5. These involve estimates of $4,000,000 more.

The Illinois State Waterway connects with the Chicago drainage canal at the Lockport powerhouse. There a huge lock with a lift of 41 feet will drop barges from approximately the Lake Michigan level into the Des Plaines river, into which the drainage canal here discharges.

Deep Water Through Joliet

Joliet is two miles below the Lockport powerhouse. At present the sewer-laden Sanitary canal flow of diverted Lake Michigan water rushes through Joliet in the bed of the Des Plaines river. The current is swift and strong—far too swift and strong for barge navigation. But a dam built at Brandon Road just below Joliet will back the stream up to the lawer sills of the Lockport lock. It will raise the low water level through Joliet from 10 feet to 30 feet. A fine body of water—but if Chicago doesn't purify its sewage by treatment, poor Joliet!

Joliet's sewers discharge into the Des Plaines river and this backing up of the stream will upset the entire system. It will make necessary, also, the raising of all bridges, the providing of draws and the building of retaining walls. Because of these facts the waterway division and the city of Joliet have had a series of sharp battles trying to reach a settlement on the various issues involved. They have just come to an agreement.

The waterway will build intercepting sewers in the retaining walls and carry sewage below the city. At Brandon Road, the city has secured land. There, when Chicago has set the good example, it is expected Joliet will erect treatment works for the disposal of its sewage, instead of sending its wastes down the valley.

Lots of Water Power

The lock at the Brandon Road dam will have a lift of 31 feet and the power houses is expected to generate 28,000 horsepower.

The next dam and lock down stream is to be at Dresden Island, some 15 miles below Joliet, and two miles below where the Des Plaines and Kankakee rivers merge to form the Illinois river. The lock will have a lift of 15 feet and the power plant is expected to generate 18,000 horsepower.

At Marseilles, 40 miles from Joliet, there already is a private dam in connection with the only private water power development on the Illinois river. The crest of this dam will be raised. The lock there is already completed.

Always a Wise Investment

Now Better than ever before

Dodge Brothers, Inc. have announced astonishingly low new prices.

They have announced important refinements in their product. Always building an exceptional car, they are now building better than ever.

Better in many ways—in beauty, comfort, driving vision, engine smoothness, snap, elasticity and getaway.

The simultaneous offering of lower prices and vital improvements is made possible by a gigantic expansion of buildings and equipment.

Ten million dollars so invested permit great savings through vastly increased volume and efficiency.

Part of these savings goes into further betterment of the car. The other part goes directly back to the buyer—in the form of a price reduction that staggered the industry.

DODGE BROTHERS MOTOR CARS

Because of the private power development, which goes back nearly 60 years, the state had to locate its lock some two miles below the dam. Boats will travel between lock and dam through a canal, the only one outside the river channel in the whole state waterway.

Lock in a Cornfield

The Marseilles lock is now complete, except for gates and machinery. It stands in a cornfield, alone and isolated. It cannot be used of course until the two-mile long canal has been dug. The Marseilles lock has a lift of 21 feet which is two feet more than that of the Sault Ste. Marie locks. The power plant is expected to generate 7,000 horsepower.

The final lock, dam, and powerhouse are to be at Starved Rock, near Utica, where the state waterway joins the federal government improvement of Illinois river. The lock will have a 16-foot lift and the powerhouse will be built to generate 22,000 horsepower.

Lake Water a Cost Saver

What part does Lake Michigan water play in this waterway? It provides, through the Drainage canal, the major flow on which the scheme is based. The Des Plaines river has a low water flow of less than 100 cubic feet per second and the Kankakee a low water flow of from 200 to 400 cubic feet per second. But it must be remembered that the authorized flow of 4,167 cubic feet per second is a very considerable volume of water and plenty for 8-foot depth slack water navigation in the waterway and that the Chicago Sanitary District and the Illinois State waterway are asking congress for much more, 10,000 c. f. s. diversion.

"We want the full 10,000 c. f. s. diversion of Lake Michigan water because it will mean a 9-foot channel instead of an 8-foot channel, "says Chief Engineer Barnes. "It will save the state of Illinois $2,000,000 in construction costs."

Illinois expects to gain from this diversion in another ways. The ful diversion will increase waterpower. The state expects to net nt least $1,500,000 a yenr from its waterwny power plants.

Both the need of the full 10,000 c. f. s. diversion for navigation and the water power matter will be treated more fully in later articles.

WHAT MY NEIGHBORS SAYS

Is of Interes to Charlevoix Folks.

When one has had the misfortune to suffer from backache, headaches, dizziness, urinary disorders and other kidney ills—and has found relief from all this sickness and suffering, that person's advice is of untold value to friends and neighbors. The following case is only one of many thousnnds, hut it is that of a Charlevoix resident. Who could ask for a better example?

Hubert Ackert, mason, 107 W. Garfield Ave., Says: "I had a constant ache in the small of my back I was nervous and often dizzy spells came over me. My kidneys were sluggish and the secretions were scanty. After using a few boxes of Doan's Pills, from Metcalf's Drug Store, I was fixed up in good shape." (Statement given May 4, 1920.)

On October 9, 1924, Mr. Ackert said: "Every time I have had occasion to use Doan's Pills, they always have given the same good results."

BASKETEERS WIN OPENING GAME

It will require a lot of work because the team will be playing on foreign courts during the whole year and the boys will be at a disadvantage by not having a chance to practice on large floors on which they will have to play.

The athletic officinls earnestly desire that all that possibly can attend the two games here at home and give the boys your loyal support.

The games are being played away from home this year as we have been unable to get teams to come to Charlevoix to play due to the smallness of the playing court. This means a big finnncial loss as the expense needed to carry on the sport must come through home games as the money we get from going awsy does not hnrdly pay cnr fare to the cities.

Let's everyone get out and boost for the boys Friday night when Pellston comes here to play.

FLOYD JEFFREY MAKES FINE RECORD

Selected Honor Recruit From Com- of 109 Men

Floyd Jeffrey, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Jeffrey of this city, who is now home on a furlough from the Great Lakes Training Station, Great Lakes, Illinois, has made an enviable record for himself during his three months in the U. S. Navy.

At the end of three months preliminary trnining at the naval station, Floyd was selected as Honor Recruit of Co. L-72 out of 109 men. Following are the reasons given for his selection:

1. Aptitude.
2. One of the neatest men in the company.
3. Military appearance.
4. Advocate of good fellowship and contentment.
5. Has never had to be reprimanded.
6. Attained the highest marks in competitive examinations.

INDEPENDENTS LOSE TO BOYNE QUINTET

Locals Completely Outclassed By Up-Lake Squad

Charlevoix's Independent basketball team rnn into some tough opposition last Saturday night when they played the Boyne City Independents nnd went down to defent by a score of 53 to 14.

The locals were completely outclassed during the first quarter of the game, the period ending 29 to 0 in favor of Boyne. Unfortunately there was no time-keeper on the job and the period ran well over the alloted time of 10 minutes, allowing the victors to pile up their large lead. The Charlevoix boys held Boyne City to a 14 point lead during the remainder of the game and showed a much better brand of basketball after discovering what they were up against. In the preliminary game the seniors defeated the freshmen.

CHURCHES STRONGLY BEHIND MOVEMENT

Temperance Forces Have No Intention of Quitting

The Baptist church was filled to the doors last Sunday evening at the union service held in observnnce of the sixth anniversary of National Constitutional Prohibition.

Pastor Mattson of the Congregational church made the principnl address the ministers of the nther churches participated.

From the tenor of the remarks it is evident that the temperance froces have no intentinn of quitting and the churches stand strongly hehind the prohibition movement.

The meeting was held under the auspices of the Woman's Christian Tempernnce Union an interdenominational temperance organization, the membership of which was well represented in the audience.

EDITORS WILL HOLD MEETING AT LANSING

Annual Press Conference Held During Farmers' Week

Editors of the state's "home town" papers will guthrr at East Lansing on February 4, 5 and 6 for the annual meeting of the Michigua Press association, half-century old orgunization of the men whp who publish the weekly newspapers of Michigan.

The editors gathering, following the custom of recent years, will be held during the last days of the annual Fnrmers' Week at the Michigan State College, which is scheduled for February 1 to 5 this year.

Wuys and means of developing a paper which will be increasingly efficient in serving the needs of the "home town" where it is published will form the baekbone of the program for the conference. In addition to an interesting list of speakers from the rnnks of the Press association itself, u hulf dozen men with national reputations in the weekly newspaper field have been secured as "lead" speakers of the various programs.

Outstunding umong the social features of the meetings will be a big banquet on Friday evening. February 5, to be held in the new Union Memorial Building ut M. S.-C. The banquet will be followed by a special theutre party for niembers of the assoclation.

David Hubbell, editor of the Croswell Jeffersonian, president of the Michigua Press assoclation, und Len W. Feighner, editor of the Nashville News, and executive secretary of the association, ure planning the details of the conference. An attendance of between 175 and 200 is expected.

POLICY RULING IS A NEW ONE

Recent Clause Makes Employer Liable For Car Owner

Insurance compahies are inserting special clauses in fuctory policies to comply with the recent ruling of the supreme court, making employers responsible for dumages when employes nre injured in the course of duty when driving their own machines.

The Michigan Supreme court ruling, handed down by Judge Howard Wiest, was la the case of Cummings vs. the Automobile Crankshaft corporation. A employe of the concern sustained a slight injury und u fellow employe volunteered to transport him to a hospital. The shop superintendent accompanied the employes on the trip. On the way the workman's cnr struck and killed a pedestrian. Suit began against the corporation by the widow of the mnn killed was lost in the lower courts but the supreme court ruled that the employer is liable in such case.

The ruling is attracting considerable attention in the insurunce world due to the great number of automobiles voluntarily brought into service, primarily as a convenience for the employe himself.

The Snnday school is aiming toward the three hundred mark for the month of January. It is well on the way. Help it arrive by being present next Sunday.

The Epworthinns are studying Mexican conditions in relation to church life at the devotional service for a few Sunday evenings. The hour is six p. m. Lots of singing, a devotional lesson, and much that is of local interest precedes this very interesting Mexicnn study. Be present next Sunday evening and stay for church.

Rev. C. E. Pollock is called out of the city this week Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday for addresses in near by towns and cities.

The Methodist Episcopal church in Michigan is finishing its solicitntion for a hnlf million dollar endowment fund for its retired ministers. Already more than three hundred thousund dollars has been secured. A man in Detroit offers to pay the last ten thousand. It is proving n popular idea. It certainly is a worthy uchievement to provide for the sacrificing people who made possible the great civilization and its attendent comforts whlch all enjoy today. It is also in keeping with the program of nll other progressive institutions that employ many men. The church doea well to lead in the program of caring for its worn out employes.

Michigan Has Largest Rink

James B. Hnskins, Hownrd City publisher and member of the new state fair board, snys the ice rinks at the state fair grounds are the largest nrtificial rinks in this country. On Sunday, January 10, the rinks accommodated 12,000 skaters, he says. After a day and night skating bee about 10 tons of ice cut by skaters is swept off the rink.

COUNTY AWAKENS TO LOWER WATER PROBLEM

Petition Circulated Asking for Deepening of Chennels

A petition originutiag in Boyne City was circulated in the city on Monday of thls week by George Weaver, urging congressional aid in the matter of securing u government dredge to deepen the chnnnels between Lake Michigun and Pine lake, urgently requesting that the dredge come here as soon as the ice breaks up in the spring. There was no trouble experienced in getting sufficient signatures.

It is evident, according to the content of the petition, that the county in general is becoming awakened to the fact that the low water in the channels leading from Lake Michigan through to Pine lake need immediate uttention if industries at Boyne City and East Jordan are going to continue to use boats as a means of bringing raw material to their plants.

The failure of the Griffin to negotiate the outer chunael last fall with her load of iron ore for the East Jordan foundry has probably hnstened this netion. Spring is the logical time to deepen the channels, there being no heavy storms or movements of ice to carry sand back into them. It is our earnest hope, as well as thnt of others interested in the matter, that the petition will bring desired results.

ENTICED TO THE WITCHES CAVERN

Into their cauldron the witches cast everything imaginable from giblets to dried mushrooms—even adding a feather to hold all together. After much boiling and stewing one witch cried, "Where shall we empty this tub?" Another witch unswered, "Down the necks of the Shakespeare Club."

Following this original "playlette" modernizing the witch scene from Macbeth, the club members found themselves in the home of the president, Mrs. Marguerite Swinton, where a delicious luncheon was served (with a savory trace of the caldron broth). The tnbles were decorated with narcissus and ferns, harbingers of spring, and the Shakespearinn idea was curried out in seating the guests. At the close of the luncheon, the secretary, Mrs. Shanahan, proceeded to call the roll, using limericks descriptive of the club spirit.

To make this a real Shakesperian afternoon, charades, representing titles, characters and quotations from the work of the bard, were devised and presnnted by the members of the club, creating muchmerriment and strife.

Thns another milestone in club life is passed, and the executive committee consisting of Mrs. Swinton, Mrs. Stelter and Mrs. Shanahan are to be congratulated on putting over such a delightful affair.—A Victim.

TO DECIDE WHERE ANGLERS MAY FISH

Meeting for Charlevoix District in Petoskey Tuesday

Meetings will be held at various points throughout the stnte next week, under direction of the state conservation commission, to determine the trout strenms that will be opened for fishing this year. Last September the conservation commission ordered all streams closed, with the understanding thut before the opening of the 1926 trout season some streams would be opened.

It is the opinion of Director Baird, as well as n great majority of fishermen, that ull feeder streams should remain closed. The question now to be decided is what main streams are to be opened.

A hearing for this purpose will be held in Petoskey next Tuesday, Jnnuary 26, the Petoskey meeting covering four counties, Charlevoix, Emmet, Cheboygan nnd Otsego. Deputy R. David Jones will represent the conservation commission.

It is urgent that local anglers decide before this date their choice of streams to remain open. This matter will be definitely decided at the Petoskey meeting, and Charlevoix will be represented by men who are interested in the matter, and also who will as near as possible carry out the wishes of others. Get together, boys, nnd come to a decision on the streams in this end of the county to remain open.

FIRE LOSSES RUN HIGH INTO MONEY

Over Four Thousand Acre Area Burned Over in County

(By Ed. A. Nowuck.) The 1925 forest fire report compiled by Charles A. Peterson, chief forest fire warden, stntes that 63 grass, brush uad forest fires burned over a total of 4,202 acres in Charlevoix county doing an estimate damage of $7,631.00. The average ucreage each fire burned is given as 66 acres.

The average cost of damage per acre is given as $1.80. There were 22 fires of undetermined origin, 17 clearing fires, five set by enmpers, two by railroads, one was incendinry, sixteen by careless smokers.

There were, in this county, three fires that burned less than one-quarter acre in area, twenty-eight that were from one-quarter to 10 acres in area, and thirty-two over 10 acres.

Hints Suggested to Prevent Calf Scours

Cure Will Be Simpler if Animal Is Treated Quickly.

Indigestion or inflammation in the stomach is the common cause of scours in calves. If the calves are watched closely and treated at the first indication of scours, the cure will be much simpler. Always begin the treatment by cutting down the ration, thus giving the calf a chance to rid itself of the irritating material.

In slight cases, after one or two feeding periods have passed, the calf will appear normal and full feeding can be gradually resumed. In more obstinate cases, however, it may be necessary to give a physic of two or three ounces of castor oil in a little milk. Formalin, one-half ounce in fifteen and one-half ounces of water, as a stock solution also is recommended. This should be given to the calf at the rate of a teaspoonful of the solution in each pint of milk fed.

But, since the "ounce of prevention" is all important, the following hints to calf feeders are suggested by dairy specialists at the New Jersey State Agricultural college:

1. Always have milk at the same temperature when feeding. Different temperatures will cause scours. The correct temperature is blood heat, or 98 degrees Fahrenheit.
2. Keep all feeding pails clean and sweet.
3. Do not overfeed. It will cause scours.
4. Keep calves in a bright, airy pen. Sunlight is essential to the growth of vigorous calves.
5. Always supply clean, fresh water.
6. Salt aids digestion. Keep it before the youngsters at all times.
7. Pens should be warm but not hot nor damp.
8. Do not crowd too many calves in one pen.

Now that the pasture season has come to a close, the dairyman's mind is turned toward the feeding of his cows this winter.

With high-priced grains and a shortage of hay in many sections, the first impulse is to rough them through as well as possible without feeding what the owner knows they really ought to have. This practice never pays with good cows, and if the cows are poor ones, then it does not pay to feed them anything. The place for the poor ones is the butcher and the sooner they go there, the less expense they will be to their owners.

As evidence of the fact that stinted feeding to good cows does not pay, a case is cited in one cow-testing association where the herd having the lowest feed cost of all the herds in the association, $33.41, produced the lowest average milk production, 3,026 pounds, the lowest average butterfat production, 133 pounds, and the lowest return above feed cost per cow, $16.36 per year. In the same cow-testing association the herd having the highest cost of feed per cow, $59.10, yielded the highest average production of milk, 7,292 pounds, the highest average production of butterfat, 359 pounds, and the highest return above feed cost per cow, $105, of all the herds in the association.

Squashes and Pumpkins Not Difficult to Keep

Squashes and pumpkins for feeding or house use are not difficult to keep. First cut the stem two or three inches away from the squash instead of pulling away. Squashes keep better than pumpkins, but both like a dry airy room, and no place is better than haymow. Piled here and covered with hay they will keep far into the winter. Squashes often keep well until spring. If you cannot use the haymow pile them in a granary bin if it is in the barn and provided stock is kept under the same roof. When covered with straw or hay they will generally keep safely. A few may be kept in a closet or in the basement if it is warm and airy.

No Demonstration can reveal all of BUICK Excellence

Any time you drive a Buick you will wonder how such a remarkable car can be sold at such a moderate price.

In just a few minutes you will realize that you are starting, stopping, parking, driving with much greater ease and security. And that you are surrounded by quality and luxury which rank with the very finest.

But demonstration will tell only part of the Buick story, and you should know all of it.

A demonstration cannot show you the enduring stamina of body and chassis that belongs to Buick. Years are necessary for that. It can only suggest the powerful ability of Buick's 75 horse-power Valve-in-Head engine, built for hills. It cannot tell you how thoroughly the Buick "Sealed Chassis" and the Buick "Triple Sealed" engine will protect Buick performance on dusty, gritty roads.

And it cannot even hint of the mental ease you will enjoy, with Buick Authorized Service "just around the corner," everywhere in America.

Better Buick Six Cylinder Valve-in-Head motor cars range in price from $1125 to $1995, f.o.b. Buick factories. Among the Buick open and closed models there is one that will meet your desires exactly.

TROUT STREAMS TO BE OPENED

RESULT OF PETOSKEY MEETING HELD TUESDAY

Representatives from Each District Designate Streams to Be Opened to Trout Fishing

Representatives of sporting clubs and others interested in fishing, especially for the wily brook trout, met in the city hall in Petoskey Tuesday forenoon, in response to a call from the State Conservation Commission with regard to the reopening of all trout streams of the state which had been closed by the commission some time ago.

Each county were instructed by the commission to send delegates to the meeting to designate the streams to be opened. A delegation from Charlevoix composed of Geo. Wenver, Sam Hamilton, Clarence Wood and A. J. Usher, also similar delegations from Boyne City and Boyne Falls and other parts of the county attended the meeting, representing their respective districts. At a caucus prior to the meeting, the streams to be opened were decided on.

Another matter of great importance to Charlevoix, the ruling made by the conservation commission regarding trolling from motor driven boats, was discussed. The committee representing Charlevoix were assured that this ruling would not be made mandatory in the waters of Pine and Round Lakes, also in the waters of Torch and Elk Lakes in Antrim county.

One of Charlevoix's chief attractions is the wonderful rainbow trout and steel head fishing in the waters of Round and Pine Lake. Hundreds of dollars have been spent in equipment by our summer visitors. Rainbow and steel head trout fry and fingerlings are planted yearly at consideruble expense. The Association of Commerce and city have fostured this in their advertising and booklets, with the result that these water are known everywhere as excellent fishing grounds. No restrictions, however, have been made as to the number of fish constituting a legal catch. This matter was taken up with the commission, by the Charlevoix delegation, with the result that from now on a day's legal catch of rainbow or steel head trout will be limited to two fish to a person, or four fish to a boat, the term boat meaning a party of two or more persons.

Streams to be designated as "open to fishing" in Charlevoix, Emmet and Cheboygan counties are as follows:

Charlevoix County

Horton Creek, Monroe Creek, McGengh Creek, Inwood Creek, Boyne River, north branch to Hudson township line; Boyne River, south branch to where its stream crosses M-13 in Warner township; Spring Brook, north and south brnnch from Bear Creek to boundary of road south of Cook's crossing; Bear River, all in Charlevoix county; Deer Creek, from Deer lake to Jordan river; Warner and Collins Creeks, from Boyne Valley-Wilson township line roads to where they empty into Deer Creek; Jordan River all in Charlevoix county exeept small feeders; West Branch of Sturgeon, all from Hoffman Lake to Otsego county line; Porter Creek, full length.

Emmet County

Bear River to county line; main stream of Maple River to Emmet county line; Carp River, Minnehaha Creek, Sucker Creek, Van Creek, Cedar Creek enst to county line; all streams leading into Wycamp lake.

Cheboygan County

Main stream of Sturgeon River from Burt Lake to Wolverine and thence south along M. C. Ry. right of way to Trowbridge on county line; part of west branch of Sturgeon River from Wolverine southwesterly to crossing of M-14; main stream of Pigeon River; main stream of Black River; Carp Creek, Laparlell Creek, Mill Creek, Green's Creek, Littlo Milliken, Little Black and Maple River.

All streams open to fishing and closed indefinitely will be placarded as such, at points where they cross main highways and at other places. All feeder streams are closed regardless of location. It is the intention of the state conservation commission to strictly enforce the law, and they ask the co-operation of all citizens in their efforts to keep the stream designated closed to fishing free from violations.

GIRLS' GLEE CLUB HOLD DINNER

Function Given in Honor of the New Members

The old members of the Charlevoix High School Girls' Glee Club gave a delightful dinner in honor of the new members Thursday evening, January twenty-first, in the lower hall of the high school building.

Covers were laid for 46 at the two long tables which were decorated with bouquets of red and white carnations. Red crepe paper cups filled with mints and the place-cards further carried out the red and white color scheme.

After the dinner, old songs were sung, and short talks were given by Miss Vanderhagen, Ida Ingalls, Fannybelle Siminow, Mr. Coverdale and Mr. North. Cecil Pollock played "Humoresque" by Dvorak and responded to the generous applause with two encores beautifully played. This closed the evening's festivities which were greatly enjoyed by everyone. It is hoped that the Glee Club dinner will become an annual affair.

C. H. S. LOSES FRIDAY'S GAME

PELLSTON WINS BY SCORE OF 11 TO 6

Contest Was Fast One—Poor Team Work Puts Locals on Short End of Score

The Charlevoix high school basketball team lost a fast and snappy game to Pellston high school last Friday evening at Hooker's garage, the final score being 11 to 6 in favor of the visitors.

Although fast and furious from start to finish, the game was marred by the ragged team work and poor passing of the locals. No one seemed to be in the right place at the proper time and coupled with poor basket shooting Charlevoix gained only 3 points throughout the entire game. Brown, Pellston center, led the scoring for the visitors with two field goals and two free throws and was closely followed by his teammate, Zimmerman, who made two field goals and one free throw. Charlevoix's scoring was evenly divided. Davenport getting one field goal and one free throw, Brown one field goal and Herrington one free throw. Following is the line-up:

Charlevoix		Pellston
Davenport	rf	Zimmerman
Herrington	lf	Anderson
Brown	c	Brown
Winder	rg	Frook
Higman	lg	Schmalzried

Field goals—Charlevoix, 2; Pellston, 4; free throws—Charlevoix, 2 out of 7; Pellston, 3 out of 8. Referee, James Fairchild, Boyne City.

Charlevoix goes to Petoskey on Friday evening of this week to play the so-far undefeated Petoskey team. The boys have had a hard work-out this week and are trying hard to get into winning form. A tough battle is looked for Friday night and a good crowd of rooters would work wonders in putting "pep" into the local squad. Let's get out the flivver and go over with the team and give them our cheering support. Last year over fifty carloads made this trip to see the game. Let's go again.

SMALL DAMAGE RESULTS FROM FIRE

Believed Blaze Caused from Flying Chimney Spark.

The Charlevoix fire department was called out last Sunday morning at about eight o'clock to extinguish a small roof fire at the Walker residence on State street.

The fire was of undetermined origin, although the firemen express the opinion that the blaze started from a chimney spark lodged beneath the cornice of the roof. Damage which will probably amount to around $100.00, was confined to the roof, the chemical being used to extinguish the blaze.

Card of Thanks

We wish to thank the firemen and neighbors who so kindly helped us during the fire at our home Sunday morning.

WINTER SPORTS FEBRUARY 1 TO 15

CHARLEVOIX READY TO ENTERTAIN VISITORS

Federal Engineer to Visit City and Discuss Low Water Level at Associatioo Meeting

Owing to the small attendance at the Association of Commerce meeting last Wednesday evening, considerable important business, including the appointment of committees for the ensuing year, were postponed until a later meeting.

President F. E. Cartier gave a detailed report on the recent meeting of the Great Lakes Harbors Association, held in Detroit, to which he was a delegate from this city. He reported that some six hundred delegates were present at the meeting, representing all harbors on the great lakes, Canadian and American. Speakers from different points aired their grievances concerning the Chicogu "lake milkers" and Mr. Cartier reports that the association is a strong organization and without a doubt will ultimately be successful in checking the "water steal" from the great lakes.

A motion was made and passed to the effect that the Association of Commerce invite Muj. Godard of Grand Rapids, federal engineer for the district including Charlevoix, to attend a regular meeting of the association, at which time the low water in our marbor and channels will be thoroughly discussed with a view of formulating some plan to remedy its present condition.

The winter sports committee has been busily engaged the past two or three weeks making preparations to entertain those who take advantage of Charlevoix's invitation to come here during the two weeks from February 1 to 15 and enjoy the program of winter sports being arranged for them. Advertising to this effect has been placed in the Sunday issues of the Detroit News, Chicago Tribune and St. Louis Globe Democrat, and through the co-operation of W. E. Wolfden, general passenger agent of the Pere Marquette railway, through sleeper service will be maintained from Chicago during this period.

The program of entertainment calls for bob-sled parties on Bridge street hill, which is already in good condition, skating parties at the municipal skating rink on the school grounds, tobogganning and skiing on Mt. McSauba and the new slide in the city park, dancing parties and sleigh rides. Arrangements

After the session of cards a daiaty luncheon was served and the guests departed declaring Mr. and Mrs. Jacobs royal entertainers.

WHAT IS THIS GULF WATERWAY

ILLINOIS PLAN OF BIG CONCERN TO ALL MICHIGAN

No. 4

(By Arthur W. Stace)

When the inland water sailor or adventurer of half a dozen years hence navigates the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway on barge, or packet, or private cruiser, he will exclaim with delight when he comes to that stretch covered hy the Illinois river from LaSalle to the Mississippi, a distance of 223 miles.

Here is one of Natures finest waterway gifts to America. Here is a valley rich in materinl wealth and in scenic beauty. Here is a stream singularly adapted for development into a mighty bearer of commerce.

The Illinois river below La Salle is 600 to 1,400 feet in width. It has a sluggish current, due to the fact that in the 223 miles from LaSalle to the Mississippi there is a fall of only 27.5 feet. Water diverted from Lake Michigan gives ample depth for packet and barge navigation.

River Flows Through Canyon

The river cuts a deep gash thru the Illinois prairie land. The stream is far below the tops of the bluffs that border its course. And these tops of the bluffs instead of being the peaks of hills, as they appear from the river, are simply the edges of the flat corn lands that extend away for miles and miles in almost unbroken levelness.

Between the river and the bluffs are rich bottoms, which a quarter of a century ago were claimed by the river as its very own, possession being asserted in periodical floods which turned the whole valley into a vast lake. Outside of high water times, the bottoms were largely wildernesses of marshland, lakes, bayous, wild rich fields. They were paradises for wild fowl and for hunters.

Now the bottoms are being reclaimed for agriculture. Dozens of so-called "drainage districts" have been organized. These have built levees to hold the river within its normal banks. They have ditched the land behind the levees and established pumping plants to drain lakes, bayous and marshes. They have developed rich fields out of what were but recently wild duck lands.

Boats Sail Above Fields

These reclaimed bottoms are entrenched behind their dikes like the truck farms of The Netherlands. In many places the voyager on the river sails along on a level well above the fields of corn and rice.

In places the bottoms narrow to several miles in width. In other place they broaden out to 8 or 10 miles.

The hills are always in view of the voyager. They have no charm of their own. As the Mississippi is approached the scenery becomes impressive. Enthusiastic dwellers of the valley liken it unto that of the Hudson river, and the visitor is not inclined to contradict them.

Away back in the days when Mark Twain was a river pilot and the Mississippi was one of the nation's busiest highways, glorying in its "swift" packets nnd its gorgeous "floating palaces" the largest of the Mississippi steamers could navigate as far as La Salle during the higher stages of the Illinois. But at low water only flat boats drawing less than 20 inches could be sure of a floatable margin over shoals and bars.

Slack Water System

To provide navigable depth at all times, the government engineers worked out plans for a slack water system. This included four dams and locks, at Henry, 27 miles below LaSalle; at Copperas creek, 60 miles farther down; at La Grange, another 60 miles further, and at Kampsville, 45 miles below La Grange and 32 miles above the juncture of the Illinois and Mississippi rivers. The plans were prepared right after the close of the Civil war, but Uncle Sam was so poor then congress could not appropriate the necessary money.

So the state Illinois built the dams and locks at Henry and Copperas creek, the first in 1871 and the second in 1877. These furnished all season navigable water in the middle stretches of the river, connecting just below LaSalle with the state-owned Illinois and Michigan canal, which provided a water highway to Chicago.

PASSAGE OF ACT DELAYS FILINGS

PENDING CHANGES IN PRESENT INCOME TAX LAWS

Taxpayer May Close His Books at Any Time He Wishes—Will Have Some Amount to Pay

Heretofore taxpayers have been urged to file their income tax returns early. The filing of returns this year is delayed, pending the enactment of the new revenue act now before the Senate, which, as it passed the house, contains changes in regard to rates and other features. However, there is nothing to prevent a taxpayer at this time from closing his books and computing his next income. Such computations will not be affected by any provisions of the new act. The actual preparation of the return itself, after computation, requires, in a majority of cases, but a few minutes. Therefore, it is advised that all figures and data be assembled, pending receipt of blanks by taxpayers. When released, blanks will be sent to taxpayers and also may be obtained at the office of Collector Charles Holden of Grand Rapids.

Forms 1099 and 1096 used for making information returns, are now available at offices of collectors of internal revenue and branch offices. Such returns are required of persons "in whatever capacity acting" who made to a single person during the year of 1925 a payment of $1,000 or more, or to a married person a payment of $2,500 or more. Such payments include salaries, rent, interest, "or other fixed or determinable gains, profits and income."

Collectors of Internal Revenue are not authorized to receive information returns, which should be addressed to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Sorting section, Washington, D. C.

YOUNG PEOPLE MARRIED AT BOYNE CITY

Ceremony Occurred in the Free Methodist Church

EDUCATIONAL CAMPAIGN UNDER WAY

STOP SALE OF CIGARETTES TO STUDENTS IS AIM

Local Schools to Cooperate With Women's Committee in Educational Work

A committee of women interested in the welfare of the community has undertaken an educational campaign regarding cigarette smoking.

We are glad to see this campaign inaugurated. Men who are habitual smokers realize the economic waste and the bad effect upon the system. The habit, once formed, is hard to break and adults quite generally will advise young people not to begin it.

Children are sometimes sent to the store by the father for cigarettes for his own use. It is unlawful for dealers to comply with his request and embarassing for them to refuse and run the risk of losing a good customer, but it opens the way for young people to buy cigarettes for themselves by telling an untruth, and dealers and parents should be glad to cooperate in keeping to the letter any law which is made for the protection of youth.

Hon. Herbert Hoover in a recent letter to President Coolidge expressed the opinion that the greatest menace to the country today was the growth of the cigarette habit among children.

Following we reproduce a copy of the state law covering this matter and predict that it will be well for dealers and young folks alike to think twice before violating the provisions carried within:

"Section 1. Any person within this state who sell, gives to, or in any way furnishes any cigarettes in any form to any person under twenty-one years of age shall be punished by a fine not to exceed fifty dollars or imprisonment in the county jail for not not to exceed thirty days for each offense.

Section 2. Any person under twenty-one years of age who shall smoke or use cigarettes in any form, on any public highway, street, alley, park, or other land used for public purposes, or in any public place of business or amusement, may be arrested by any officer of the law who may be cognizant of such offense; and further, it shall be the duty of such officer, upon complaint of any person and upon warrant properly issued, to arrest such offenders and take them to the proper court. In case the offender is found guilty the court may impose a penalty in its discretion in the sum not to exceed ten dollars or imprisonment in the county jail not to exceed five days for each offense.

Section 3. Any person who knowingly harbors any person under twenty-one years age, or grants to them the privilege of gathering upon or frequenting any property or lands held by him, for the purpose of indulging in the use of cigarettes in any form, shall be held under the same penalty as provided for under section one of this act: Provided, That no part of this act shall be construed as to interfere with the right of parents or lawful guardians in the rearing and management of their minor children or wards within the bounds of their own private premises."

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS
By B. C. Mellencamp

Don't Forget Farmers' Week Feb. 1st to 5th, 1926

If you can possibly take a few day's vacation from your farm, you can devote your time to no better advantage and value than to plan visiting your Michigan State College, February 1st to 5th inclusive and see for yourself just what the college is doing and how it is functioning for the benefit of the agricultural interests of the state.

This will be your best opportunity to visit the different departments and the facilities they offer at your service, the experimental farm and the information and its results for your benefit and the livestock buildings and livestock housed therein, including their experiments conducted along all lines of livestock subjects.

During Farmers' Week program Febraury 1st to 4th inclusive, emphasis will be placed upon three phases of agricultural interest. Tuesday of that week has been designed as "livestock Day," Wednesday "State Fair Day," and Thursday "Horticultural Day." On the last named day the new horticultural building will be dedicated, a building that is one of the best in the county and a beautiful addition to the campus.

In addition approximately thirty different agricultural associations will have their annual meetings during the course of the week, probably the most important of which will be the annual meeting of the State Farm Bureau. And don't forget that banquets will be held by various state breeders associations and that among the entertainment features will be basketball games, wrestling matches, etc. all for visitors to Farmers' Week.

With a line-up like this there will be something of interest to you at all hours of the day and night and is there any doubt that your time cannot be spent profitably and pleasurably.

Have also notification from Lansing that all railroads in the state will charge only one and one-half fare round trip ticket beginning January 27th and ending February 4th, and the return ticket good until midnight of February 6th. Make plans for attending and you will have spent the best live days of your life.

Bovine Tuberculosis Eradication

As a result of the action of the Board of Supervisors of Charlevoix county at their last session, plans are being formulated for furthering the tuberculosis work this year and will insure this county of continuing the high rating that it now holds for several more years. It is indeed gratifying that the appropriation was made with an unanumous vote which is in accord with the popular sentiment and indicates the sincere efforts being made to make Charlevoix county one of the healthiest spots in all Michigan to live.

The first test made was conducted in the early part of 1923 and with results that exceed our expectations, for out of some 10,000 head tested, it was found that our percentage of infection was only five tenths of one per cent, which enabled Charlevoix county to be declared a modified accredited area on July 23rd, 1923, upon its first test, which gives us the distinction of being one of the first four counties in the entire state to be accredited all on the same date.

At that time we were declared accredited for a period of three years, which makes our time expire in July of this year. The action of the Board of Supervisors will make it possible to maintain a clean slate, and it is hoped that the tuberculosis eradication work will have been completed by that time, so that no lapse of time will occur between the old and the new accreditation.

From the latest information from the state veterinarian at Lansing it will only be necessary to test 20 per cent of our cattle this year. Then if the results show less infection than the first test, no further testing need be done and we will be recommended as an accredited area for another short period of time. This 20 per cent must include all the herds having infection on the first test and no doubt the herds from which cattle in infected herds have been purchased, and then if the 20 per cent have not been tested, additional herds having had no reactors will be tested in various portions of the county, to make the total necessary. With this plan, it can be easily seen that the expense will be less to the county and that we can maintain a clean slate.

It is interesting to note the progress being made throughout the state in tuberclosis eradication. In 1921—44,984 cattle were tested. 1922, 158,457; in 1923, 274,014; in 1924, 393,217 and in 1925, 404,573 were tested. In 1923 there were only 4 accredited counties in the state, in 1924 only 7, while on December 31st, 1925 there were 15 accredited. On the same date work was in progress in 15 counties and 22 counties were included in the waiting list. Thus 56 out of 83 Michigan counties had adopted the area plan of eradication bovine tuberclosis by the close of the year, lenving three upper peninsulnr counties and twenty-four in the lower peninsulnr, in which no netion had been taken. These 19 counties now on the cleun list, include 344,157 cattle or 21.1 per cent of the cattle population of the stnte.

Michigan is very fortunnte in having low rnte of infection as compared with other states in the dairy belt of the 404,573 enttle tested the past year, only 2 per cent were pronounced diseased and it is estimated that a test of all the cattle of the state would show not over 3 per cent infection. In the dairy districts in many sections of the east, 25-30 per cent of the cattle are infected. One county in New York is said to have 60 per cent tuberculosis cattle and Illinois authorities estimate that 70 per cent of the cattle of McHenry county in that state are infected.

As a result of our tuberculosis work, our export shipments of dairy and breeding cattle in 1925 were 2 1-2 times as grent as the previous year. Upwards of 200 carloads have been sent out of Livingston county alone, while Ontonagon county in the upper peninsular has shipped 19 carloads since being accredited.

Jackson Gregory Author of Latest Tom Mix Picture

"The Everlasting Whisper," the screen adaption of Jnckson Gregory's novel, in which Tom Mix is starred, and which opens n two day run at the Palace theatre, Saturday and Sunday, January 30 and 31, is one of the finest stories in which the noted William Fox western star has ever appeared. Directed by J. G. Blystone, the picture is based upon the lure of the rugged Northwest, involving action as thrilling as the romance of the story is beautiful.

New Carey Film is Cyclone of Action

A dashing hero, a pretty heroine, a desperate bad man, a couple of other characters thrown in to take sides with or against the hero, and some fast riding is all that most picture nudiences require to vote n "western" a success. But let it be said to the credit of Hunt Stromberg, the producer, and Scott Dunlap, the director, that they were not satisfied to rely on this formula when they made "The Texas Trail," the latest Harry Carey picture.

There is a dashing hero—yes—and there is a pretty heroine and a desperate villian and all the other requisites, but in addition to all these there are, a really human, plausible story, exquisite scenery, breath-taking rides, thrilling chases, and blood-tingling fights that make the picture next Wednesday, February 3, at the Palace Theatre far and away the finest western we have ever seen.

Skating Race Friday Night

Skating enthusiasts will find plenty of entertainment nt the municipal skating rink on Friday night of this week. Besides the regular evening of skating, there will be a two-mile race between some Indian lads of the city and efforts are being made, with sponsors assured, of a hockey game on the new rink west of the tennis courts. Turn out and enjoy an evening of sport.

Lambs in Cornfield

Lambs do well when turned loose in the corn field. They pick up much that would otherwise be wasted. Some extension specialists are of the opinion that live stock men would save money by laying in their supply of commercial feeds at this time. Corn put through the silo saves the entire plant for the live stock. It further helps by toning up the appetite and, through this improved appetite, the animals make better use of all other feeds.

Registration Notice, for City Primary Election

Even in those days Illinois was iverting Lake Michigan water—or the Illinois and Michigan canal umped 600 cubic feet of water per econd from Chicago river to provide ecessary flow across the shallow and ıort divide between the great lakes ystem and the Mississippi valley. nd even in those days Chicago was ending sewage down the valley by eans of the canal and the Des laines river.

Dams Built Too Soon

Uncle Sam contributed the re-aining two dams to the slack wa-r system, those at La Grange and ampville, in 1889 and 1894 respec-vely. And since the latter date oats that could navigate the Miss-sippi above St. Louis have been ble to steam up the Illinois all the ay to LaSalle, for there has been seven-foot channel at all stages of ater. Passage around the dams ıd, of course, to be made by means the locks. The two state locks ıarged tolls, while the federal locks ere free.

Had Uncle Sam waited a few ears longer he probably never ould have built the dams and cks at La Grange and Kampsville, r in 1900 the Chicago drainage ca-l was finished and the sanitary strict began to divert Lake Mich-an water into the Illinois river in ch quantities as to change entire-the navigation aspects of that ream.

Diversion began with around 3,-10 c. f. s., which was five or six nes more than the low water flow the Des Plaines nnd Kankakee ers, which merge to form the Illi-is. Diversion increased gradually until in recent years it mounted to 10,000 c. f. s., the normal capacity of the drainage canal. It is now supposed to he not more than 8,500 c. f. s., the amount officially permitted while Chicago is changing from the dilution method of sewage disposal to the treatment method.

Dams Now Drowned Out

The flow from Lake Michigan practically has drowned out the dams. Boats ordinarily ride right over them, disregarding the rotting locks. Government engineers maintain the dams are now a detriment to navigation rather than an aid. They advise the removal of the Henry and Copperas creek dams as one of the first steps in the advanced federal improvement of the Illinois river as part of the Lakes-to-Gulf eight or nine-foot waterway. They advise the removal of the La Grange and Kampsville dams as soon as the necessary low water channel has been privided by dredging.

Abandonment of the locks and dams will save millions of dollars in reconstruction and in maintenance. The present locks are 350 feet long by 75 wide, whereas the Illinois state waterway locks to which they would have to conform are 600 to 110 feet.

Estimates of the cost of providing an eight or nine-foot channel in the Illinois river in place of the present seven-foot channel will be given in a later article dealing with the question of whether the sought-for 10,000 c. f. s., diversion from Lake Michigan is necessary to navigation in the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway.

Boats on the Illinois

Present navigation in the Illinois river is confined largely to the operations of two grain barge lines, a twice-a-week packet service between Peoria and St. Louis, and the intermitten trips of exeursion steamers and lauaches.

The twiee-a-week packet operated by the Eagle Packet Co. is a picturesque river boat of the old type with twin stacks away up in front, swinging landing stage, low main deck, and huge rear paddle wheel. The excursion steamers are of the same order.

The grain barges are less romantic in appearance, but far more effective in meeting modern transportation conditions and needs. They are operated by two companies, hoth of which have thoir headquarters at Pekin, which they have made a big grain assembling and shipping point. The Smith-Hibben Co. has two towboats and five barges and the Turner-Hudnut Co., has two towboats and seven barges.

Barge Lines Are Unique

Both lines are unique in that they originate and handle their own shipments. They have strings of elevators along the Illinois from LaSalle to the Mississippi where they gather the grain from farmers,—mostly corn, for the river runs through the heart of the Illinois corn helt. The harges, which carry 8,000 to 20,000 bushels of grain, pick up the grain from these elevators and bring it to Pekin where marine "legs" unload it into main elevators for transfer to railroad cars or deliver it to huge grain-using concerns in Pekin, including the Corn Products Co., which has a consuming capacity of 65,000 hushels of corn a day.

The grain barges often opernte 11 months in a year. They are tied up a month or so in the winter by the ice and have a short rest in May and June—the between-seasons period in the grain business, after the old crop has been mnrketed and before the new crop has been harvested.

The Smith-Hibben barges in addition to plying along the Illinois river nlso opernte in the Hennepin canal, more properly known as the Illinois and Mississippi canal, running from helow LaSalle on the Illinois across to Rock Island on the Mississippi. They are the only boats using the canal, a $9,000,000 projget, which, it is carefully explained by those interested, will come into its real usefulness when the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway is opened.

There is now no through bnrge service between the Illinois and the Mississippi, either by river or canal. The Illinois Barge & Boat Co. which tried several years ago to put on such a service failed to win financial success—its troubles being charged to antiquated and inadequate equipment. Pictures of its hargo fleet carrying an immense load of automohiles from St. Louis to Peoria are prominently displayed in Illinois State waterway promotion literature. It is understood thnt nutomobile shipment had to be snapped while the snapping was good for it wns a "once and only" performnnce.

Total freight traffic on the Illinois river in 1924 amounted to 122,776 tons—mostly grain—valued nt $6,-739,839. The peak in tonnage was reached in 1917 when traffic renched 284,970 tons valued at $8,000,000.

The next article will tell of present navigation and conditions on the Mississippi river stretch of the Lakes-to-Gulf. project.

They mean that henceforth no one need be forced by economy to invest in less than Dodge Brothers quality.

They mean that a car world-renowned for its long life and dependability is now well within reach of every income.

They are made possible by a $10,000,000 expansion program, vastly increasing production, and introducing the latest and most advanced efficiency processes into motor car manufacture.

They apply to the finest line of motor cars Dodge Brothers have ever produced—

Graceful and stylish new body lines. Rich and attractive new colors.

Perfected steel body construction, affording, among other things, complete vision from every angle, greater safety, greater beauty and longer car life.

GET AT THE CAUSE!

Many Charlevoix Folks Are Showing How to Avoid Needless Suffering

There's nothing more annoying than kidney weakness or inability to properly control the kidney secretions. Night and day alike, the sufferer is tormented and what with the burning and scalding, the nttendant backnche, headncho nnd dizziness, life is indeed a burden. Doan's Pills —a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys —have hrought peace and comfort to many Charlevoix people. Profit by this Charlevoix residents' experience:

Mrs. Harry Webster, 214 E. Upright Ave., snys: "My back wns lnme and sore and I suffered with a severe pain in my side nnd aeross my kidneys. My kidneys were sluggish and failed to act often enough. I surely felt all out of sorts nnd nothlng helped me until I used Doan's Pills. Doan's cured me and the cure has lasted."

The wind storm last Saturday made things jingle, doing some minor damage.

On account of the condition of tbe roads last Sunday, Rev. C. M. Conklin could not get to his Atwood appointment. We hope this will not happen ngain.

We will allow you $2.50 on your old Ford radiator and install a new Koolfast, the best on the market. Benj. Brown.—Adv. 49tf.

Improved!

A Type of Performance Never Before Obtained In Any Low Priced Car

If you are one who has not yet been behind the wheel of the improved Chevrolet you have more than a treat in store. You have yet to experience a type of performance never before offered in any low-priced car.

A performance so effortless, so smooth, so powerful, so spirited that you will call it nothing short of a revelation!

Chevrolet's leadership has been based on giving quality at low cost. Now the Improved Chevrolet gives another reason for an even wider margin of leadership—performance the equal of wh:h ha heretofore been unattainable in the low-price field.

Drive where you will—and as long as you like, through traffic, through sand, through mud, over hills—and over mountains, if you please. Expect something really new, really worthwhile, something really unique—and you will not be disappointed.

The two stores are located on the main street of Mnncelona and are partially covered by insurance.

My Home Towo

I am proud of our city for its location is right. It was made from the wilderness by our forefathers, and now there is no place so pretty, no place so fine, no place to compare with this home of mine. It is only n dot on this great hemisphere, but God made it for us and we nre satisfied her. I have no desire to leave it, I care not to roam; if looking for beauty I can find it here at home.

Some people like the South and some like the West, but they have never been here or they would know it's the best. Chnrlevoix the Beutiful, the best place in the land, a dot on the globe but a prize to Michigan. —Alvie Alexander, Route 2, Charlevoix.

HAVE BUILT 1,500,000 CARS

SUCH IS THE RECORD OF DODGE BROTHERS

Eleven Years and Two Months Have Elapsed Since Their First Car Was Produced

The building of 1,500,000 Dodge Brothers Motor Cars was completed Thursday, January 14 at 10:15 A. M. just 11 years and 2 months after the first car bearing the name rolled from the assembly line. This production record stands as an achievement never approached by any other motor car maker in an equal time after the building of his first car.

Car number 1,500,000, a special Touring Car, although greatly refined in point of beauty and riding comfort, shows a striking family resemblance to the first of this noted line, thanks to Dodge Brothers sound policy of constantly improving a Standard basic design. During the production of this immense number of cars there has never been an annual model, never a change that was not a distinct betterment.

The dates when Dodge Brothers output passed important production figures show clearly the continously accelerated demand for the product. The first car was built November 14, 1914.

The first 100,000 cars were completed in 23 days less than 2 years. The 500,000th car was completed on June 30, 1920, 3 years, 9 months and 7 days later. Car 1,000,000 rolled off the line December 12, 1923, 3 years, 5 months and 12 days later. 1,000,000 cars had been produced in 9 years and 1 month.

The last half million cars were produced in 2 years, 1 month and 2 days—an interesting record compared with 5 1-2 years for the first half million.

The last 100,000 were built in 5 months and 9 days—the first 100,000, in a few days less than 2 years.

Car No. 1,500,000 as soon as it had been checked by the final inspection department was shipped to the Albertson Motor Company of Los Angeles, Cal. Albertson "Scout Cars" have long been familiar sights on the roads of California where they are in constant service laying out and rechecking tourist routes and investigating road conditions for newspapers and the automobile clubs. The members of the fleet are Dodge Brothers cars Nos. 300,000; 600,000; 900,000 and 1,200,000. And now car No. 1,500,000 is on its way to take its place in the well known scout fleet. The Albertson Motor Company has a standing order with Dodge Brothers, Inc., for every 300,000th car.

In fact many dealers have filed advance orders for cars which mark the completion of large round numbers in production. For instance, W. L. Eaton, Dodge Brothers dealer in Seattle, Washington, has filed an order for car 2,000,000.

A record of having built and sold a million and a half motor cars in a little over eleven years invites attention to Dodge Brothers prodoction and sales policies. Undoubtedly the policy to which their success should be attributed more than to the others is that which is now associated with Dodge Brothers name whenever the problem of annual models and rapid depreciation is discussed—that is the policy expressed in the words, "Constantly Improved but no yearly models."

Strong public demand has kept production capacity of the plant constantly oversold. Dodge Brothers original plant of 20 acres of floor space has been constantly expanded to its present size of 130 acres. The expansion program completed during the last few months at an expenditure of $10,000,000 gives Dodge Brothers, Inc., a present capacity of 1500 motor cars per day.

have been completed with several farmers to handle sleigh ride parties and also furnish those delicious chicken dinners which this section is noted for.

The new hockey rink on the school property, facing Clinton street, is rapidly nearing completion and will be ready for use before the end of the week. Local hockey enthusiasts have formed teams and will be ready for action as soon as the rink is completed. In fact, any party of winter visitors coming to Charlevoix during the weeks before mentioned will be assured of entertainment and winter sports to their heart's content.

We will say this much to our home people. No project of any nature will be successful unless you believe in it yourself. You have every facility before you for outdoor sport during the winter. Get out and try a little of it and at the same time convince yourself that Charlevoix has as much to offer in the line of winter sports as any other place in the country. If you believe it yourself, it will be much easier to make others see our point of view.

CHARLEVOIX LANDS TEACHERS' MEETING

Three Hundred Expected to Attend Convention in May.

Upon his return from Reed City, Sunday, where he had been attending a round table meeting of the 5th District Michigan Teacher's association, A. C. Belding brought with him the announcement that Charlevoix had been chosen as the meeting place of that organization for their next meeting, which will be some time in May.

The 5th district is comprised of the territory from Reed City north to the straits, the membership being school superintendents, principals and county commissioners of the territory included in the district. The meetings are usually "stag" affairs, but this year members have been invited to bring their wives along to enjoy "Charlevoix the Beautiful."

The meeting will be a two day session and the program will include several speakers of note.

RED AND WHITE LOSES ANOTHER

PETOSKEY SQUAD PROVES TOO FAST FOR LOCALS

Although Beaten From Start Alldred's Men Contest Every Inch of Ground

Coach Alldead's Red and White baskethall team lost to the fast Petoskey outfit last Friday evening in the game played at the Petoskey gym, by the one-sided score of 35 to 11.

Outclassed in every department of the game except, possibly, skill in pnssing, the locals fought to u game finish, stubbornly contesting every inch of the ground. Charlevoix had very poor support from her fnns, probably due to the impassible condition of the roads to car traffic, very few fans making the trip by train.

First Quarter

Petoskey gets ball and Slack runs it down the floor. Foul called on Petoskey and McCann makes the free allowed. King in turn misses two frees on Charlevoix fouls and Menzel misses n third free basket a minute later. Slack gives Petoskey her lead with three goals, ringed in rnpid succession. Petoskey fans go wild. Beer misses two free throws allowed on fouls. Foul called on Brown, Charlevoix, and Menzel makes the free throw allowed. March rings the bell for Petoskey with a fielder. Menzel misses a free and Davenport scores Charlevoix's initial goal, Brown, Charlevoix, makes a free on foul, but the point is ruled out because he steps over line in tossing. Slack and Davenport wind up the first quarter with a field goal apiece, lenving the score: Petoskey, 11; Charlevoix, 5.

Second Quarter

Dribbling occupies the first few minutes of this quarter, both sides running the ball viciously up and down the floor without score, Slack finally breaks the spell with a fielder and shortly thereafter misses a free throw on a foul. Brown misses a free for Charlevoix and Slack scores another goal. Slack makes another basket in play but the referee's whistle beats the ball to the wire as time out is called. Slack takes advantage of nnolher Charlevoix foul and scores a second free, a minute later the pistol cracks. The first half ends with Petoskey chalked up with 17; Charlevoix, 5.

Third Quarter

Brown makes a free throw on foul. Beer misses a free. Foul called on Slack, McCann misses free throw. Brown removed from game for fnur personals. Hnrrington takes his place. Menzel mnkes a free throw. Harrington throws a long goal and Beer comes back promptly with two ringers to go him one better. Menzel misses two chances for a free. McCann scores a free on foul. Third quarter ends. Score: Petoskey 22; Charlevoix 9.

Fourth Quarter

Winder misses a free throw for Charlevoix. Slack scores a goal for Petoskey. Beaudoin is substituted for Davenport. March chalks up a fielder and follows it with two free throws aad a minute or two later scores another free. Slack makes a field goal, repeating the performance witbin a short interval. March misses both of two frees on fouls. Harrington scores a field goal for Charlevoix. Slack rings up another fielder and King and McCann both miss frees. Techaical foul called on Cbarlevoix, but Slack fails to score the free allowed. Menzel closes the evenings entertainment with a fielder. Score: Petoskey 35; Charlevoix 11.

SPELL "MICHIGAN" OUT ON LICENSES

Estimated 1,200,000 Set for 1927 Requirements

Preparation for the manufacture of probably 1,200,000 sets of Michigan license plates for 1927 are being made hy officials of the Michigan state prison, it was announced by Warden H. H. Jackson recently. Approximately 1,000,000 sets of 1926 plates have been made, he said, and additional orders are expected to swell the total past the million mark.

The 1927 plates will be of uniform size for both passenger and commercial vehicles, according to the warden, a new design prepared by prison draughtsmen having been accepted by the secretary of state. The name "Michigan" will be spelled out nt the bottom of plate instead of appearing in an abbreviated form at the side leaving more room for the numerals. The legend on the plate will be black with the background orange.

New machinery installed in the prison stamping plant will reduce production costs materially, Warden Jackson stated.

EXTRA LECTURE COURSE NUMBER

DUVAL-BALDI COMPANY HERE MONDAY EVENING

Sponsored By Local Schools in Effort to Raise Lacking Fúnds—Are Fine Entertainers

One of the most popular companies in the field is the Duval-Baldi company which comes to the Palace Theatre next Monday evening, February 8th, in a progrom nf magic and music abounding in originality and clever surprises, the number being sponsored by the school.

Duval is one of the youngest and most successful magicians hefore the public. He is a master of wizardry and features many novel and thrilling specialties. Each number is replete with clean, riotous fun, presented always with an accompaniment of sparkling quips and jokes.

Duval supplements his magic with a novelty which he chooses to call "Rag Pictures." In this he creates beautiful scenes, also portraits of famous personages, from mere rags pieced together on a board.

Joseph Baldi, premier accordionist, is the musician of the company and is outstandingly popular in his own field. He presents both classical and popular numbers, including many selections made into Victor records by the famous Pietro.

This splendid program, in every detail, is one of genuine artistry and a source of real enjoyment for every member of their audiences.

This entertainment is sent out by the Redpath Bureau and not a regular number of the winter lecture course series, being sponsored by the local school in an effort to raise funds for the support of the lyceum course, which, financially and plainly speaking, has operated at n loss this winter. Lack of interest and attendance on the part of Charlevoix citizens has been responsible for this condition. Whether the lecture course series is to be given another season is entirely up to the public. Your attendance at this extra feature on the program will be taken as signiticnnt of your desires. The program is not sponsored for financial gain, but to furuish high-class entertainment for the public during the winter montbs and therefore should be geaerously supported.

RELIGIOUS VISITATION PLANNED

CITY'S CHURCHES UNITED TO CARRY OUT PROJECT

Organization Perfected Last Suoday —February 14th is Day Set for Campaign

Representatives from all the churches of the city of Charlevoix, were invited to attend a meeting nt the Methodist Episcopal church last Sunday afternoon at 4:30 to consider the advisahility of making a religious census of the community. Four churches responded with the presence of their pastors and some of their membership. Expressions nf interest in this proposal were heard froai several of thoso present, and from the representatives of other church fellowships which were not otherwise represeated. It was considered wise to make such a city wide visitation in the name of the churches of the city, and the following organization was perfected to carry out the plan:

Chairman, Rev. C. E. Pollock.
Secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Brayton Saltoustnll.
Committee on Publicity
Rev. G. B. Mattson.
Rev. William Eldridge.
Rev. Herman Burns.
Rev. C. E. Pollock.
Committee on Visitation
Mr. Willinm Black.
Mr. Charles Carey.
Mr. A. B. Sheldon.
Mrs. Brayton Snltonstall.
The pastors of the participating churches committee on records
The City Librarian, Minnie E. Payton.
Mr. Orson Everts.
Mr. Roy Harris.
Mrs. Louise Smith.
Mrs. John Burns.

Tho ufternoon of February 14th was chosen as the date for the visitation. The churches are united in a desire to serve the community in every way possible, and take this method to get acquainted with the people of the city nnd learn their religious desires. This is a method that is being very commonly nged today, and is meeting the appreciation and hearty cooperation of many cities where it is used. Such a system of friendly visitation was recently carried out by all the churches of our neighboring city of Petoskey, and was most heartily appreciated by the people as a step in the right direction of n feeling of religious good fellowship in the entire community. It is purely for the purpose of increasing the efficiency of the churches as they serve the community, that the regulation cards and literature from the Michignn State Sunday School Council of Religious Education have been procnred and will be filled out by the visitors as a means of permanent reference for the churches. Every home will be visited, and it hoped that every family will cooperate in this program of city wide religious good will. Charlevoix is very providentially favored, and its outstanding characteristic may well be its religious cooperation and good fellowship.

WHAT IS THIS GULF WATERWAY

ILLINOIS PLAN OF BIG CONCERN TO ALL MICHIGAN

Lowering of Lakes Level By Chicago Drainage Caoal Covered io Series of Articles

No. 5
(By Arthur W. Stace.)

Father of Waters, gigantic in capacity as n carrier of commerce but erratic in working moods as a wilful child—the mighty Mississippi is the longest and most important link in the lakes-to-gulf waterway.

When, in n few years hence, barges loaded at Chicago with products destined for the far south of the ports of the Pacific, reach the mouth of the Illinois river at Grafton, they will find themselves still 1,300 miles from the gulf of Mexico. And, contrariwise, when barges upbound with lumber or raw sugar or sisnl enter the Illinois they will have 332 miles yet to go before reaching the clear waters of Lake Michigan.

Mississippi Is Ready

The Mississippi will be rendy to bear lakes-to-gulf traffic whenever politics-hampered Illinois gets its part of the job done—the state waterway from Lockport to Utica. From the mouth of the Illinois to St. Louis, 37 miles, Uncle Sam maintains a 6-foot low water channel which could be deepened comparatively easily to 8 or 9 feet by dredging the sand bars. From St. Louis to the mouth of the Ohio, 183 miles, is an 8-foot channel, which likewise might be deepened to 9 feet by dredging if this were deemed advisable. Below the Ohio river the minimum depth is 9 feet.

These are low water depths. As a matter of fact considerably more water is nvailahle for navigation during the greater part of the year. And the minimum is experienced mainly on the bars which are such a characteristic part of the Mississippi. Barges designed to navigate an 8 or 9-foot channel can haul to capacity during high and mean water stages and get through during low water by reducing their cargoes. The higher stages are experienced from February to July and the lower stages from July to December.

Self-Wilied Old River

The old Mississippi has eccentric peculiarities which have bothered navigators from the early days. Mark Twain encountered them when he was helping Capt. Bixby pilot the Paul Jones up and down the shifting channel. The captains of the modern self-propelled express barges of the federal Mississippi-Warrior service encounter them today. The self-willed stream simply will aot "stny put" as a staid, sober, business-like waterway should. It goes up and down and wanders here and there and rolls its bars ever and anon with a cheerful disregard of the commercial needs of man and his desires to control it.

Is the Missouri Real Daddy?

At the mouth of the Illinois the Mississippi is a clear-water stream about 3,500 feet wide and with a flow about twice as large as that which the Illinois contributes to it. Some 20 miles lower down the turbulent Missouri joins the Mississippi and the character of the latter changes right there. It becomes a muddy flood, which fluctuates with puzzling irregularity. In fact, it takes on so many of the undesirable qualities of the Missouri that one wonders at the mistake the early explorers and geographers made in designating the Mississippi as the parent stream.

The Missouri is the longer from that point, reaching back 2,55t miles to Three Forks, Mont., where the Jefferson, Madisnn and Gallatin conjoin to form it. The Mississippi, on the other hand, stretches back only 1,200 miles to Lake Itasca in Minnesotn. The flow of the two rivers used to be ahout the same nt their juncture, but now the Mississippi has a slight edge in low-water stages hecnuse of the discharge of Lake Michigan water into it through the Illinois river.

Records of the government engineer's office credit Lake Michigan with supplying nearly one-fourth of the low-water flow at St. Louis,

Rivers of Ups and Downs

The Mississippi widens to about 5,000 feet at the mouth nf the Missouri and the average width between the old banks from there down to Cairo is 4,300 feet. At some points it is, of cnurse, much wider than that.

The river has an astonishing rise and fall. The oscillation between

MOVE PLANT TO SAULT STE. MARIE

WHITE LUMBER CO. SOON TO LEAVE BOYNE CITY

Change Made on Account of Company's Extensive Timber Holding Near the Soo

A Sault Ste. Marie news item states that the White Lumber company of Boyne City, Mich., which has been operating a large mill for the past 40 years at Boyne City, has virtually completed arrangements to move its entire plant and equipment to Sault Ste. Marie during the next few months. A. W. Dawson, industrial engineer of the Civic and Commerce association of this city, informed the actual meeting of the club tonight. Only formal ratification of a schedule of rates on the products of the company between Sault Ste. Marie and Detroit remains to be done before the transaction is closed, Mr. Dawson said, and this ratification has been promised by high officials of the Soo Line and Duluth, South Shore and Atlantic railways.

The White Lumber company owns 200,000 acres in standing timber in the immediate vicinity of the Soo and plans to operate with timber from the great forest lands of Canada, just adjacent to that city, for many years to come.

A guaranteed minimum of 75 men in the mill has been made the commercial association with an additional $4,000 a month payroll in the lumbering woods. The site for the new mill has been purchased by the company on the river front for $20,000.

Sixty flat cars, owned by the company, will be brought here from Boyne City, where W. H. White owns the Alpena-Boyne City railway. Thirty carloads of equipmeat will be brought here. The compaay will use from 12 to 14 carloads of logs daily.

With the addition of this mill Sault Ste. Marie has the greatest lumbering industry in the upper peninsula, except for the Ford mill at Iron Mountain.

NINE CHEERS FOR THE FACULTY

OPENED WHIZ MEETING IN C. H. S. FRIDAY

Members of Student Body Impersonate Faculty in Manner That Results in Merriment

The student body of the Charlevoix high school was not only greatly surprised, hut greatly amused in Friday morning chapel, when our yell master, portrayed by Anna Shearer, announced a pep meeting. A whiz nf a meeting was started by giving nine cheers for the faculty, who it was announced would all be called upon to give speeches. Our innocent and unsuspecting faculty members were just screwing up enough courage to go through an extemporaneous talk or basket-ball when lo and behold out of the history room marched their exact likenesses. A semi-circle on the platform provided all the necessary stage properties. Each faculty member was represented and every member awaited their turn to declare their ideas and hopes on the out-come of the C. H. S.—P. H. S. basket-ball game.

Mr. Coverdale—(Freda McMillan) was the first spokesman and managed with great ability to keep the student body in continous laughter. "Mr. Coverdale" told us we must not linger in the halls and that whispering was prohibited. Also that anyone who had lost a fountain pen was to call in the office.

Miss Duprey—(Goldie Boyer) was also a scream and informed the tudents that her heart was with the boys.

Miss Fox—(Essie Rinehart) was very aptly portrayed, and in her usual manner, assured the boys that their work must be made up hy Monday.

Miss Keller—(Dorothy Parker) a blossoming remembrance. Her speech was very characteristic and she ended by giving our a current event assignment. Miss Keller meet [illegible]

Mrs. Johnson—(Lucile Belding) gave an excellent speech and portray[illegible] one of the little personal charact[illegible]ties which provided unlimited mirth. See yourself [illegible]

Miss Thomas—(Anna Dixon) followed by a very humorous speech. She gave several good jokes and told us that she just couldn't think standing. Anna ought to be on the stage, no applause during either!

Mr. Alldread—(Leona Smith) caused the room to fairly shake with mirth, and gave several little characteristics that will no doubt be long remembered.

Miss Cluke—(Henrietta Baldwin) aptly portrayed her member of the faculty and did much to add merriment to the program.

Mr. North—(Genevieve Supernaw) last, but by no means least, wound up the speeches by the faculty far beyond our expectations.

After a hearty applause they favored us with a song in the so-called "dnuble dutch." The program ended hy all singing "Red nnd White" lead by the "faculty."

The faculty were nll portrayed by the senior girls. Words fail to express the ability these girls have shown. That so much genuine talent has so long heen unseen will always he a mystery. Let's go girls, nnd have more of those side-splitting programs.—By nn Amused Student.

CLASS TEAMS PLAY SATURDAY NIGHT

Plenty of Action Promised to Fans Who Attend

There will be two basketball games at Hooker's garage on Saturday evening of this week, the first game starting at 7:30, between class teams of the high school.

Games between the classes nre exciting and fast affairs and those who attend will see plenty of action. The first game will be between the junior and freshman teams, starting at 7:30 and the second game will be staged between the sophomores and the so-far undefented senior team. Basketball fans nre invited to the games, which will decide the championship between high school class teams.

STATE ORDERS M-11 KEPT CLEAR OF SNOW

Maintenance Authorization Allowed for This purpose

On Monday of this week the county road commission received n maintenance authorization from the state highway department, allowing them an additional $4,248.80 to be expended on snow removal from the state trunk lines in the county.

Up until this time the state allowed this county the sum of $340.00 for the same work on trunk lines in the entire county. The county owned tractor-plow will be employed in this work for this winter and no effort will be made to have one of the state owned plows placed here for next winter. Charlevoix county will keep M-11 open from Eastport to Bay Shore, also keeping the trunk lines in other parts of the county open for wheel traffic. As long as our share of the gasoline tax is helping pay the shot, let's get all we can out of it.

ISLAND MAIL CARRIERS MAKE FIRST TRIP

Deliver Island Mail Safely at Cross Village

The first of the hazardous trips of the Beaver Island mail carriers was accomplished early Sunday morning, Carriers Willie Boyle and Carl Left reaching Cross Village at 8:00 a. m.

They left the island the previous day with a team of horses and single sleigh, making the trip to Crane island Saturday, where they spent the night, resuming their journey early Sunday morning, reaching Cross Village, their destination at 8:00 a. m. Sunday. The trip was made in good time and only once did they experience trouble, when one horse broke through the ice, but was safely rescued.

REDPATHS ENTERTAIN WITH BRIDGE PARTY

Excellent Luncheon and Musical Numbers Feature Evening

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Redpath entertained last Friday evening, January 29th, at their home on Dixon avenue for the pleasure of twenty of their friends.

The evening was spent in playing bridge, the prizes for high score being received by Mrs. Henry Partridge and Dr. W. W. Mitchell, consolation prizes going to Mrs. Frank Wilkinson and Dr. Frank Wilkinson. After the session of bridge the guests were treated to an excellent luncheon, which was followed by several musical numbers rendered by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bridge and Mrs. Archie Livingston.

Good Hubby, Says Wife, and His Is the Life

I am the wife of a newspaper man, built on the stay-at-home, all-alone plan. He is a fellow whose work is his life, making yours truly a newspaper wife.

Dinner is ready, he's seldom on hand. Got an assignment, a story to land. Children in bed. I just ramble through books. Really, I've almost forgotten his looks.

Riches could never gather him away. There in his newspaper work he will stay. Some of his neighbors believe he is dead—never gets home till they're all gone to bed.

Others think he's a traveling man. Neighborly functions don't fit in his plan. He doesn't care what they think about him. He's in the game, while they're just on the rim.

I am the wife of a newspaper man. Many a woman is in the same van. Hardships it means, but this much may sound strange—I wouldn't want him to falter and change.

He has a calling in which he's wrapped up. Keeps his interest; full is his cup.

Please keep your pity—it's under my ban. I am the wife of a newspaper man.—T. D., in New York World.

Diet for Health

The Department of Agriculture says that the well-balanced diet provides within the limits of the fuel, or calories, needed to maintain the best body weight for age and height: Protein, right in kind and amount; iron, calcium, phosphorus and vitamins A, B and C. The diet should be either bulky or "potentially" bulky; that is, capable of increasing in volume as it passes through the body. Balance should be extended also to matters that affect taste. There must be a variety of flavors. Bland, sweet, sour and savory foods must be used in right proportions and either carefully blended or skillfully contrasted. So, too, with textures. Hardness, softness, starchiness, fatness, crispness and succulence are all pleasing qualities, but they must be balanced one with another if the diet as a whole is to be attractive.

LOCAL RADIO CLUB ELECT OFFICERS

"Trouble Committee" Named Whose Duties Are Numerous

Forty-five radio fans responded to the call for a regular meeting of the Charlevoix Radio Club held in the council rooms Tuesday evening.

Causes for numerous squeeks and howls that radio owners have to contend with was discussed and a committee named to look into and if possible find the source of trouble. Those selected for this responsibility were Clarence Withers, Clarence Wood, Chas. H. Hamlin and Chet See. Now if local fans will only report their troubles to any member of this committee, steps will be taken to overcome it.

Every radio owner in the city is asked to become a member of the club. The next meeting is scheduled for Tuesday evening, Februnry 16, at the council rooms.

We would suggest that a school of instruction for the benefit of people "tuning in" be one of the chief duties of this "trouble committee." This might be of benefit to the owner of n new machine put into operation within the last month, whose efforts to tune in fills the air with the most unearthly noises yet experienced, and has without doubt been the cause for more comment and cuss words than and other source of trouble.

WEATHER INTERFERES WITH TEST

International Radio Test Week Shows Little Results

Radio fans whose efforts to pick up Europe the first four nights of last week resulted mostly in nothing but static, at least have the satisfaction of knowing that their cousins across the seas were no more successful. Reports from Europe showed that the fans there had only indifferent success in picking up America's international radio week programs.

Two of England's leading amateurs reported that they could hear KDKA at Pittsburg very faintly, but that static prevented them from picking up other stations which they usually get.

Berlin again reported that the government radio station had been able to hear KDKA faintly but Italy, although fans tried for American reception, was unable to report any success.

Tuesday WLW at Cincinati put on a special twenty-four hour program for European stations and WOC Davenport and WGY Schenectady, broadcast special programs in an attempt to set distance records, announcements being made in fifteen different languages.

It is stated from Washington that unusual disturbances in the Aurora Borealis is the cause of the interference, affecting not only radio but telephone and telegraph service.

With every fifteen 9c articles purchased Saturday, you can get a 30c bottle of O'cedar polish for 9c. The Charlevoix Hardware Co.—Adv. 5-t1

FIRE LADS CALLED TWICE LAST FRIDAY

First Blaze Caused Little Damage—Second False Alarm

The fire department had a busy day last Friday, answering two alarms, one in the forenoon and another at about four o'clock in the afternoon.

The first call was turned in at about nine o'clock in the morning from the John Hull home on the south hill. The fire was discovered in the toilet, where a broken lantern was found, leading firemen to the opinion that it had exploded and caused the blaze. Little damage resulted and the fire was soon extinguished. In the afternoon of the same day Amos O'Neill was burning rubbish in his yard and some one, thinking the house on fire, turned in an alarm. This little episode supports the old adage: "Look before you leap."

annual low and high water averages 40 feet at Cairo, mouth of the Ohio, nnd 25 1-2 feet at St. Louis, while the extreme range is 55.7 at Cairo and 44:4 at St. Louis.

The natural depths available for navigation nt St. Louis are 4 1-2 feet at low water, 9 feet at mean, and 16 feet at bank-full stage. The river stage at St. Louis oscillates between low water and mean stage for 200 days a year and between mean stnge and high for 152 days. Channel work by the government has, of course, eliminated the 4 1-2 foot stage so far as navigation is concerned, the minimum—except in the rare cnse of suddenly formed bars—being 8 feet.

Bars Rise and Fall

A strange thing about the Mississippi is that an increase in the depth of wnter does not always mean a corresponding eclarance above the bars existing in lower stages. The crests of the bars rise and fall with the stages of the river, the ratia being 1 to 2 1-2. In other words if the river should go up 5 feet, the captain of a packet or barge fleet couldn't figure safely that he would have that much water over bothersome bars and load or operate his craft accordingly. He would have to take into account the probability that the bars would come up 2 feet while the water was rising 5 feet.

If higher water goes down rapidly bad bars are usually left bebind. On the other hand if the water subsides slowly, the bars lower with it.

Variations by Months

An idea of the variations in the Mississippi may be gained from the following table showing the mean water depths through the year on the government gunge, zero of which is about 3 1-2 feet above the actual bottom of the river or tops of the peaks:

January	6	to 8	feet
February	8	to 12	feet
March	12	to 17	feet
April	17	to 19½	feet
May	19½	to 18	feet
June	19	to 20½	feet
July	20	to 15	feet
August	15	to 10	feet
September	10	to 9	feet
October	9	to 8	feet
November	8	to 7	feet
December	7	to 5	feet

The variations and irregularities in the Mississippi must he taken into account in the consideration of its navigation possibilities as a vital port of the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway. They were responsible for the very emphatic veto placed by the United States government engineers upon the original 14-foot channel proposition. The engineers find it difficult enough to maintain 8 and 8-foot channel depths over the crests of the bars.

"Contracting" the River

The improvement plan in the stretch between the Missouri and Ohio rivers includes an effort to "contract" the channel by means of hurdles or piling dikes. These help to send the river down through a sort of trough with sloping sides so that as the water falls from high stages a navigable depth will be maintained in the bottom of the trough. The older hurdles are of wooden piles 50 feet long, but the newer hurdles are of concrete piles 75 feet long. It is expected the concrete hurdles will help contribute an element of permanency to the improvement.

In addition to the hurdles the government is constructing banks and protecting them with revetments, mattresses and pavements in nn effort to hold the river to n uniform width of 2,250 to 2,500 feet at bank-full stage instead of letting it spread all over the landscape, as it has had a habit of doing.

Docks That Move

The wide range in the rise and fall of the river adds to the difficulty in providing boat terminals. Ordinary docks will not do. A dock that would be nt main deck level at high water would be several stories in the nir nt low water.

So they have several types of terminals, including flonting docks and moveable docks that travel up and down the bank incline on tracks as the water rises or falls. They have, too, paved sloping water fronts up to which packets can edge to load or unload in the open by means of the typical river boat swinging landing stnges.

But the most modern terminal is a fixed dock equipped with cranes and unloaders that are able to lift a cargo from a boat regardless of the height of the water and the distance from deck to dock floor.

Picturesque reminders of the old "steamboating days" on the Mississippi still remain on the river but the primise of the revival of the Father of Waters as n main artery of transportation rests not on them but upon a new type of craft now successfully plying the stream—a type that is the forerunner of the great commercial fleets that nre expected to navigate the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway when it becomes nn actuality.

This new type and its possibilities will be described in the next article.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS
By B. C. Mellencamp

Seed Corn Situation Again Serious

A recent letter from Prof. Cox of the Farm Crops Department, indicated that the seed corn question this year is again one of prime importance to the farmers.

It is now apparent that Michigan will be faced with a very serious shortage of good seed corn for planting next spring. This condition is general throughout the northern states and corn belt. The fall season was exceedingly misleading in that corn appeared to be well matured in early fall. The unusually wet weather of the fall, followed by freezes, prevented corn in the field from drying out and when freezes came germination was seriously injurod.

Tests at the Michigan State College show that many seed corn supplies thought to be in good condition are giving a very low percentage of germination. Only those farmers who field selected their corn early in the fall and hung it up for proper drying, can feel fairly certain of having good seed. Even these lots should be carefully tested. Supplies of corn should be held over and available for this years seed by those who are doubtful of the 1925 seed crop, as in many cases it will germinate satisfactory.

Every corn grower should test his seed corn supply for germination and if found unfit, as soon as possible secure dependable seed grown in his neighborhood or from other dependable sections.

Test—Don't guess.

Boware of Foreign Clover Seed

This fall and winter the Michigan Farm Bureau News has been keeping track of the amount of French clover seed, which is being imported by numbers of American seed dealers for sale to American farmers, regardless of the fact that it is unadapted to our climate, winters kills severely, and succumbs to the clover diseases which our domestic stocks survive.

The figures obtained are amazing. Since October 1st, 1925, 7,447,483 pounds of unadapted red clover seed has been passed through the port of New York on its way to farmers hands. During the last three weeks from December 13th, 1925 to January 2nd, 1926, seven ocean liners unloaded at New York some 18,458 bags of French red clover seed, each weighing about 210 pounds or total of 3,876,180 pounds of French seed.

At the rate of ten pounds to the acre, the above shipments would plant 387,618 acres to seed of doubtful value.

Before December 12th, 3,570,820 pounds arrived, which makes a totnl of 7, 447,438 pounds and enough to plant 744,743 acres to solid French seed.

More important still is the fnct that half of the quantity imported is pouring in the mid-west states—Michigan as well as the neighboring states.

In fact during the last three weeks, Toledo has received 3,866 bags, Chicago 2,300 bags, Buffalo, Milwaukee, Richmond nnd Battle Creek, right under our nose, has had 65 bags nnd is ordering more.

What does this mean to you? From all statistics available this French seed does not survive our winters in many cases only germinating 10-15 per cent, and in no case does it compnre with our native seed in stand, quality or yield. If you want to get your money's worth be absolutely sure of the origin of your seed. Buy only from reliable seed houses, who stand back of their guarantee and indicate the origin of the seed.

In this connection the various State Farm Burenus should be commended in their efforts to have a federal law passed, providing that all imported red clover seed should he stained some bright color, as purple or red in the port of entry so that American farmers can be sure of what they are getting, when they ask for domestic seed.

Moral—Know the origin of your seed.

How to Use Long Distance Economically

In your use of Long Distance, you can get better and cheaper service if you know the way in which Long Distance Messages have been classified for your convenience.

"ANYONE" CALLS—When you do not need to speak with a particular person but will talk with anyone who answers the call, tell your operator you wish to make an "Anyone" call. "Anyone" calls can be made quickly and cost less.

"PARTICULAR PERSON" CALLS—These are calls in which you tell the operator you wish to speak to a particular person. "Particular Person" calls cost more and take longer than "Anyone" calls because more time and expense are required to locate the person wanted.

On a "Particular Person" call, if you do not talk with your party, through no fault of the Telephone Company, a "Report" charge applies, providing you are given information concerning the person called.

APPOINTMENT CALLS and Messenger Service—You can arrange an appointment to talk at a definite time by telling the operator. You can have a messenger bring your party to the telephone by requesting "Messenger Service." Both of these calls cost more than "Anyone" or "Particular Person" calls.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain real estate mortgage whereby the Power of Sale therein contained has become operative, which mortgage was given by John Pesek and Josephine Pesek, husband and wife, to Margaret M Harsha, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the County of Charlevoix, Michigan, July 5th, 1922, in liber sixty-four of Mortgages on page forty-one; and whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of fourteen hundred eighty and 11 100 Dollars, together with an attorney fee of twenty-five dollars as provided for in said mortgage, and no suit or proceedings at law hava been instituted to recover the money secured by said mortgage or any part thereof; and whereas the tax required by Statute to be paid on said mortgage was duly paid prior to the recording thereof.

Now therefore, notice is given that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage and the Statutes in such case made and provided, said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of the premises therein described or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy the amount then due thereon of principal and interest together with the attorney fee, costs and expenses of the foreclosure, at public auction to the highest bidder therefor at the front door of the Court House in the City of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix (that being the place where the Circuit Court for the County of Charlevoix is held) on the 20th day of February 1926 at ten o'clock in the forenoon on that day. The premises described in said mortgage being herein described as follows; to-wit:

All the north fractional half of the Southwest fractional quarter of Section Seven (7) in Township thirty-three (33) North of Range eight (8) West, containing eighty-two acres and 84-100 acres of land more or less according to the U. S. Survey thereof.

LEARN HOW TO FEED YOUR STOCK

THREE IMPORTANT MEETINGS FOR DAIRYMEN

Feeding Schools to be Conducted By Dairy Extension Specialist J. A. Wells

County Agricultural Agent B. C. Mellencamp, who at the time we go to press is attending Farmers' Week at Lansing, has issued the following announcement which should be of great interest to dariymen and stockmen. The following announcement is self-explanatory:

"At this season of the year it is very timely and important to feed our cows the proper rations and the most economic feeds in order to obtain the maximum production as well as largest profits. With this in mind, your county agent has been successful in securing the services of Mr. J. A. Wells, Dairy Extension Specialist from M. S. C. to spend three days in this county and conduct feeding schools.

The first feeding school will be held at Charlevoix on Monday, the 8th, in the Court House beginning at 10:00 a. m. fast time and extending throughout the day.

The second will be held at East Jordan on Tuesday, the 9th, in the School Auditorium, and the last at Boyne City on Wednesday the 10th, in the Public Library, both beginning at 10:00 a. m. fast time and carried on in the same manner as the Charlevoix meeting.

No doubt you will remember Mr. Wells as the specialist who attended our Cow-test Association Picnic this last year and gave so many valuable suggestions, especially in respect to the importance of the correct mineral feeding.

In many cases there is not sufficient hay in the mow to last all winter, in some cases dairymen are required to buy all their grain, and in few cases nearly all feed has to be purchased. Under these conditions you will derive many profitable suggestions from Mr. Wells in assisting you in purchasing and selecting the right feeds in order to reap the best profits.

Don't forget these dates dairymen and be there!

Charlevoix at Court House on Monday, the 8th, beginning at 10:00 a. m. fast time and extending throughout the day, at East Jordan in the School Audltorium on Tuesday, the 9th, and at Boyne City in the Public Library on Wednesday, the 10th, each school carried on as at Charlevoix, beginning at the same time.

SHOOTS HIMSELF LIKE BOOK HERO

Harbor Man Had Been Reading Wild West Stories Lately

About noon Wednesday at Harbor Springs, Morgan Bennickson, aged 26, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Bennickson, committed suicide by shooting himself with a 32 calibre revolver. The bullet entered his head over the right ear and came out over the left.

The shooting occurred at the home on the east hill of the village, following a remark made by Bennickson to his wife to "send for Fay Erwin the undertaker." Mrs. Bennickson, thinking that he was joking, went to the kitchen to perpare dinner, saying "you are a very healthy specimen to be wanting an undertaker." She had hardly reached the kitchen when she heard the shot and on investigating, found her husband dead. Of late he had been reading a number of wild west stories and had just finished a book entitled "His Last Shot."

There had been no trouble between the couple, who were married in Petoskey, September 12, 1925.

FRIENDS INVADE GALLAGHER HOME

Spend Evening at Cards, Visiting and Pot Luck Supper

Mr. and Mrs. Francis J. Gallagher were pleasantly surprised last Friday evening when some twenty of their intimate friends dropped in upon them to spend the evening.

After regaining their composure, Mr. and Mrs. Gallagher extended the invaders a hearty welcome, and an evening of cards and social intercourse followed.

At a late hour a delightful and satisfying pot luck supper was served and the guests departed for their respective homes well satisfied with the evening's enjoyment.

BRIDGE AND POTLUCK AT PARTRIDGE HOME

The home of Mrs. Henry Partridge was the scene of a jolly party last Thursday evening, January 28th, when twenty of her lady friends were invited to enjoy an evening of cards.

After partaking of a bounteous pot-luck supper, the guests assembled for a session of bridge. Mrs. Kenne b Betts carried off the high honors of the evening, winning first prize, Mrs. Ray Hamilton winning the consolation prize. All reported a pleasant affair and Mrs. Partridge a genial hostess.

AT THE MOVIES

"Fighting Heart"

A truly all star cast appears in "The Fighting Heart," the screen version of Larry Evans' romantic story, "Once to Every Man," which opens on Saturday, February 6th, at the Palace Theatre. The picture was directed by John Ford, who made "The Iron Horse," the William Fox picture sensation of the year.

George O'Brien, featured in "The Iron Horse," "The Man Who Came Back," "The Painted Lady," "The Roughneck" and "The Dancers," portrays the leading role—a characterization entirely at variance with any other yet portrayed by the young actor.

Agnes Ayres in "The Awful Truth"

We have been noticing Agnes Ayres work ever since she began her career and it is obvious that here at least is a woman who knows how to augment the appeal of her beauty by intelligence and a sense of appreciation of dramatic art.

Her latest achievement—"The Awful Truth"—is a further example of the charm and grace and real talent which she puts into her performances. We were at first a bit unwilling to go up to the Palace Theatre to see this latest Elmer Harris offering because we were a bit afraid the screen version might not measure up well against the stage performance of Ina Claire, who delighted Broadway with the piece for two seasons. PONDER LONG OVER THIS MR. LOCAL MERCHANT

Two Charlevoix women were discussing newspaper advertising. "When I turn to the advertising columns of the Courier," said Mr. A., "I read them carefully as I would read a description of some place where, by diligent senrching, I might find a sum of money—the cold cash. Furthermore, I am not guided by what I read at the moment. If I see something offered at a price which I know means money-saving, I go to that store with the purpose of buying it and putting it nway until my present stock is worn out or exhausted. A good bargain is a good bargain anytime. I buy ahead when the snving warrants it."

Mrs. B. confessed that she was not so forwurd-looking. "My reading of the ads," she said, "is for the purpose of finding where I can get with the greatest economy, what I need right now. Somehow I have a feeling that a merchnnt is always trying to sell me something whether I want it nor not. I always make up my mind to buy only what I need and not yield to the blandishments of the bulletins about bargains. I read and shop for the day only.

In effect, Mrs. B. regarded advertisements ns temptations. Mr. A. looked upon them as opportunities. Of the two, Mrs. A. is the more efficient housekeeper. Her use of the ads is the same that the manager of nny big business mnkes of his knowledge and information concerning conditions that may or will affect his undertaking in the future. She makes her money go further than B. possibly can.

Mrs. A. advanced another shrewd observation: "The merchant who appeals oftenest to my desire to shop for the future, is the man who run the best store nnd offers the best goods. He is nvalling himself of two markets today'a and the future's. If he has sense enough to do thnt, he has ability to run his store on the best lines. I favor the merchant who advertises oftenest, with the greatest regularity and in the greatest detail. From my reading of advertisements I know enough about them to understand that the store which puts out poor looking ads or which advertises at irregular intervals in a hit-or-miss way, is the store most apt to give me hit-or-miss goods.

CHURCH VISITATION FEB. 14

COMMITTEE WILL CALL ON YOU NEXT SUNDAY

Give Them the Information They Ask and Wish Them God-speed in Their Work

The preliminary preparntions for the city-wide religious census have been worked out by the various committees of the churches, through whose friendly co-operation this valuable piece of work has been made possible. Material for the visitor's use has been received from the office of the Michigan Sunday School Council of Religious Education, Lansing. This organization is the officient servant of all the churches in Michigan which are willing to affiliate with it and that includes, by far, the majority of the churches of the state.

The questions asked on the cards which the visitors will use will give a record of all families nnd individuals, the names and ages of children, the religious interest, denomination or membership of each family or the preference of any who are not members. When this information is secured, the committee of records with headquarters at the library will first make duplicate list of all the cards which will be filed in the library for future reference, to be kept intact. The original cnrds will then be distributed to the various churches whose preferences is indicated. It will then be the duty of each church to plan a follow-up campaign of further friendly calls, especially on new comers and those not actively associated with the churches, in the courteous endeavor to assure them of a welcome to the churches and in the name of our common Master and Lord to urge upon all the high claims of His personal leadership and His great cause. If this work is done by pastors and people in a spirit of warm-hearted devotion and of tactful good will it should mark the coming lenten season as a real revival of Christian interest in the old apostolic sense when the new believers went everyhwere, bearing the message of the gospel.

The interest alrendy aroused and the fnvorable responses shown by the community at large and by those who have been asked to serve as visitors indicates that this common sense and friendly demonstration of the intereat in religion as an every day, practical matter which vitally concerns us all, will have a most beneficial effect in the life of our community.

Friends and neigbbors all, open wide your doors, to your courteous callers next Sunday afternoon. Give them information they ask and wish them and the great cause of the Christian religion and the Christian church God-speed.

PRICES HIGHER THAN YEAR AGO

Total Value Estimated as Seven Millions Greater Than One Year Ago

The total value of live stock on the farms of Michigan on January 1 is estimated at $140,411,000. Prices are higher on all classes than one year ago. While there was a decrease in the numbers of horses, cattle and swine, and only moderate increases in milk cows and sheep, the totnl value is over seven millions greater than one year ago, the value at that time being $133,140,00. For the United States, the total value is $5,001,279,000, an increase of $316,276,000 since Januury 1, 1925. The annual livestock report, containing estimntes of the numbers of each class on farms January 1 together with the numbers shown by the Federal census taken one year ago, were released today by L. Whitney Watkins, commissioner of agriculture and Verne H. Church, agriculturo statistician, U. S. Bureau of Agricultural Ecooomics.

Horses: The decline in number of horses which has been taking place for a number of yenrs still continues. However, there are indications that the minimum has been nearly reached. There are now slightly less than two and one-half horses per farm on the average for Michigan. The total number on January 1 is estimated at 474,000 as compared with 496,000 one year ago. The average price per head is $87 making the total value $41,238,000. One year ago, the price was $82 per head and the total value, $40,672,000.

The decline continues throughout the United States, the total number on farms being 15,778,000 nganist 16,554,000 one year ago. The average value per head is $65.08. On January 1, 1925 it was $64.18.

Mules: The Federal census showed that numbers of mules was increasing slightly. As the estimates are given in even thousands, the total number remains at 7,000 for both years. The price per hend is $90 as compared with $83 one year ago, making the total value $630,000 on Junnury 1, 1926 and $581,000 on the corresponding date in 1925.

The nnmber in the United States is estimnted at 5,780,000 and the average vnlue per head at $81.30. The corresponding figures for 1925 were 5,758,000 with an average vnlue of $82.24 per head.

Milk Cows: A change in classification of cuttle destroys to some extent the comparability of present with past estimates. However, the same change was made in the census classification so that figures are available for two years on the new bnsis, which separates milk cows from heifers kept for milk purposes. The estimated number of mllk cows on January 1 is 869,000 as compared with 852,000 one year ago, and the uumber of milk heifers, 153,000 against 150,000 on January 1, 1925. The average value of mllk cows is $64 per hend, or a total value of $55,616,000. Last year the average price was $60 per head and the total value $51,120,000.

WHAT IS THIS GULF WATERWAY

ILLINOIS PLAN OF BIG CONERN TO ALL MICHIGAN

No. 6.

By Arthur W. Stace.)

Gone are the romantic days of "palatial" steamboating on the Mississippi.

No longer do Prairie Belles and River Queens race each other with flaming stacks, cabin woodwork blazing recklessly under straining boilers, and "niggers sitting on the safety valves," while passengers cheer and bet and prepnre to swim.

Instead great fleets of "floating freight trnins" push stolidly up and down streum carrying as much tonnage in one voyage as the Sunny South or the Robert E. Lee might have borne in a whole season.

It is upon these fleets, conveying great masses of through freight instead of chance cargoes picked up here and there—that the hopes are built of those who expect the Lakes-to-Gulf waterwny to re-establish the Mississippi and its tributaries as a vital nnd commanding part of the nation's transportation system.

Packets Still Ply River

Picturesque packets still ply the Mississippi. Some of them dingy, run-down servers of small or second rate business, like once popular hotels that have outlived their times. Some handsome, well-kept boats offering to passengers and shippers a clean, respectable, regular service between designated river points, comparnble to thnt afforded by trans-lake liners. Some nnde over into excursion steamers. Some reduced to tow boat use.

Most of them are of the characteristic Mississippi type—low main deck, given over to boilers nnd freight; second deck occupied by staterooms, with combined cabin and dining salon down the center; twin stacks up in front; pilot house behind them with vision in all directions; big puddle wheel in the rear, or two wheels at the sides.

Packets ply between St. Louis and down river points, such as Cape Girardeau. One runs to Peoria on the Illinois. Several boats run up to Quincy and Hamburg, Ill.

Mark Twain in his book, "Life on the Mississippi" tells of a mile of "wide-awake steamboats" on the St. Louis waterfront. It is not so today.

The bank at the waterfront is pnved with rough blocks. It slopes like a roof from street and railroad tracks to the water's edge. The distance between the two at low water is close to a city block. In its higher stages the river climbs the roof and the lower stretches of the pavement become its bed. Boats can run close to the inclined shore at all stages and swing their landings to the slope. Great hooks fastened into the pavement at all heights give them seeure moorings.

In some cases freight is landed on the open shore, trucks rumbling down the sloping paved bank to pick it up. In other cases warehouses on tracks roll down the incline to meet the boats at the water's edge, climbing back up the roof again when the water rises. Aa in days of yore long lines of Negro roustabouts nre the conveyors ucross the landing stage between deck and shore.

Where Mark Twain saw "a mile of wide-wake steambonts," the visitor today may see two or three or half a dozen. The stirring glory of the river front as the old-timers knew it is no more.

But up at the St. Louis municipal dock nnd ucross the river at the East St. Louis terminal are scenes less thrilling but far more potent in promise of practical waterway transportation than would he scores of obsolete packets. Here the barges of the Mississippi-Wurrior service creep unobtrusively into their mooring places to be loaded or unloaded far from the sight of the hurrying city crowds. They come and go unnoticed, like freight trnins on shore. And as freight trains are more efficient as "earriers" thnn the more spectacular nncient stage coaches, so the up-to-date barge is more efficient than the sprightly-looking packet.

Uncle Sam's Barge Line

The Mississippi-Wnrrior service, also known as the federal barge line, is Uncle Sam's own effort to develop a fensible and efficient method of inland waterway transportation. It was put into operation six years

ICE CUTTING IS ABOUT FINISHED

TOTAL HARVEST AMOUNTS TO ABOUT 12,000 TONS

Best Ice in Years Taken From Pine Lake—Cut Lasted Around a Month

The regular nnnual ice harvest in Charlevoix will be completed by the end of this week, uccording to an announcement of Heise & Yettaw, local dealers.

The cut this year was made in three different places—off the Charlevoix Coal & Ice Co.'s ice house near the old sugar factory, Harry Widdifield's ice house and off P. M. dock on Pine Lake. Mr. Heise states that the ice this winter is probably the best that has been harvested in n good many years. It was unusually clear and averaged about sixteen inches in thickness.

The entire cut was made by Heise & Yettaw, they having purchased the equipment formerly used by O. D. Hammond and took over his yearly contracts to fill ice houses for the city's hotels. Contracts filled included Heise & Yettaw's own ice house, Widdifield three houses, Booth Fisheries, Hullett's two houses, The Inn and the Chicago Club, besides seven carlonds for the Pere Marquette railway which was shipped to Petoskey, the total nmount harvested running in the neighborhood of 12,000 tons.

While this work lasts hut a comparatively short time during the winter—averaging about a month—it is a great help to team owners and laborers here in Charlevoix. Around thirty men and twenty teams were employed on the job this year. The value of the yearly harvest, when retailed out by local dealers, will amount to some where around $50,000, so one can see that it is quite an industry.

Though it is not generally known, Charlevoix has quite a reputation outside of this district for its ice. The wnter of Pine Lake ranks A-1 in purity and it mnkes good clear ice that is much in demand, even in far distant points and during the summer season local dealers have been called upon to supply hundreds of tons to outside consumers.

CHANGES IN ELECTION LAWS

NEW LEGISLATION ENACTED DURING LAST SESSION

All Registration and Election Notices Must Be Published in Newspapers of County

New legislation enacted last winter, especially that covering spring and fall elections, registrations, etc., for both cities and townships, should be carefully read and followed out by various township and city election boards and officials.

The new law makes it mandatory that registration and election notices be published a certain number of times in some newspaper or newspapers of the county. These notices must also appear a certain number of days prior to a regular or primary election.

The Courier is publishing extracts of each section of the law covering these points for the benefit of those in charge of elections, especially in townships who heretofore have not come under these rulings.

In regnrd to registrations, the law is to be found in Sec. 3, Chap. 3, of Act 351 of the Public Acts of 1925, the part referring to publication reading as follows:

"The said clerk shall give at least one week's public notice of the days that he will be at his office, or other convenient place, designating it, for the purpose aforesnid, specifying the hours of each day, as required by the provisions of this section. Such notice shall be given by publication in three successive issues of some newspaper or newspapers, published in said township or city, nnd if deemed advisable by the township board or legislntive body, by posting written or printed notices in at least two of the most conspicious places in each election precinct. Said publication or publication and notice shall immedintely precede the reviewing of such registration. If no newspaper be published in such township or city, then publication shall be had in some newspaper distributed in said township or city."

In regard to election notices and their publiention, the law is to be found in Sec. 6, Chapter 4, Part 4, of Act 351 Public Acts of 1925, and may be found on page 571. The section reads as follows:

"On receipt of any such notice from the county clerk, the township clerk of each township and the city clerk of each city shall give at least ten days' public notice of the time and place in his township, or city at which such election is to be held and of the offices to be filled. Such notice shall be given by publication in three successive issues of some newspaper or newspapers published in said city or township and, if deemed advisable by the township board or legislative body, by posting written or printed notices in at least two of the most conspicuous places in each election precinct: Provided, That if no newspaper be published in such township or city then publication shall be had in some newspaper distributed in said township or city."

"All of the provisions of this act relative to registration in townships and cities shall apply and be in force as to registration in villages."

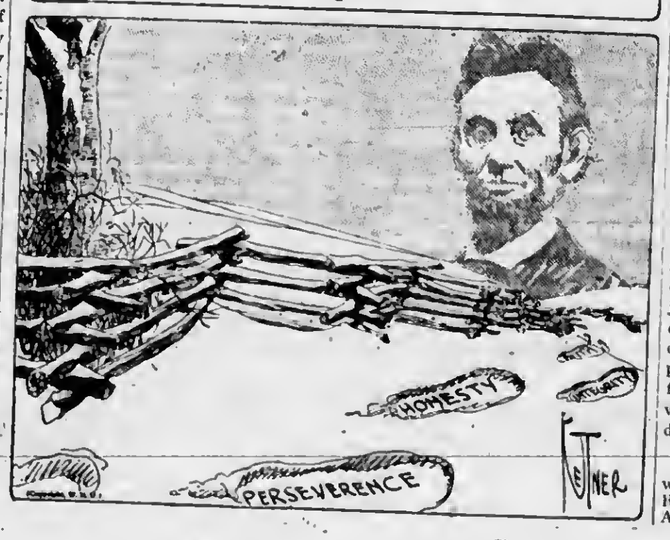
WATCH OUT FOR A FELLOW WITH ARM IN SLING

A new swindle that has been worked in many localities is this: A fellow with his nrm in a sling drops into a store late in the afternoon after the banks are closed, and purchases a few minor articles. He offers in payment nn accident voucher for $46.25 on a mythical Continental Casualty Association of Syracuse, N. Y. He states that he has just had an arm broken and the check is one in part payment, and as it bears all indications of genuiness he has been able to work it in a number of places. There is no such company and merchants in this section of the state are warned to call in the authorities if this fellow should happen into these parts.

Footprints



1905 1926

A man of seventy years and a boy of twenty went out together for an evening's entertainment. Each of them spent $10 having a good time. But what actually happened? The elderly man spent perhaps a little more than $10, possibly as much as $20. But the boy spent not less than $40 and possibly as much as $90! Why? Because he had probably fifty years ahead of him in which that $10, if saved, could have been earning interest. In a savings account or in later investments it would have doubled itself a number of times.

GIVE NEW VERSION OF GAMBLING PARTIES

Mrs. Frank D. Scott Starts New Divorce Suit

A suppressed suit for divorce was filed in the Wayne Couaty Circuit Court today by the attorneys of Mrs. Edna James Scott, against her husband, Rep. Frank D. Scott.

It has become known that Mrs. Scott makes five charges, one of them desertion. The other four charges are new, it is said.

Both Mrs. Scott and her husband were denied divorces in a contested action at Alpena, Mich., last September, by Judge Frank Emerick.

"We are going to try to make a less sensational attempt this time, but I don't know how far we'll get, said Mrs. Scott's attorney, Ward H. Peck.

In the former suit Mrs. Scott denied all the charges made by her husband and countered with allegations that he gambled "for high stakes" and that his conduct in other ways was of a nature making continued living together impossible.

Mr. Scott, in attempting to substantiate his charges of misconduct named three men: Capt. Wilbur "Jazzbo" Summer of the air service; Harry Wyskoff, a clerk at the Wardman-Park Apartment Hotel, Washington; and an unnamed man with whom Mrs. Scott is alleged to have become acquainted while traveling in Europe in the summer of 1922.

The hearing of the case before Judge Emerick at Alpena in 1925 was interrupted to permit both sides to obtain additional data and was resumed early in August. The testimony fringed with stories of liquor drinking and gambling parties at Washington and the names of several congressmen or former congressmen were heard.—Detroit News.

ALL OUT OF SORTS

So Was This Charlevoix Woman Who Tells Her Experience

All too often women accept their pains and aches as natural to their sex. They fail to realize that weak kidneys are often to blame for that backache, those headaches, dizzy spells and that tired, depressed feeling. Thousands have found new health and strength by helping the weakened kidneys with Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic. This Charlevoix case is one of many:

Mrs. H. H. Fales, 110 Robinson St., says: "I had a dull ache through the small of my back and when I tried to do anything that required stooping, cutting pains darted across my kidneys. Then as time passed, my eyes were blurred with little specks. At first my kidneys were weak and then they became sluggish. Two boxes of Doan's Pills were all I needed to rid me of the trouble."

FORMER CENTRAL LAKE GIRL WEDS

Daughter of Mrs. Frances E. Crawford Married in Detroit

The home of Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Harris, 4644 Allendale avenue, Detroit, was the scene of a simple but impressive ceremony Sunday, February 7, when Miss Ellen Crawford, daughter of Mrs. Frances E. Crawford of Central Lake, was united in marriage to Harry M. Clark, also from Central Lake. The wedding march, played by Mrs. Wm. Durance, begun at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and the ceremony was performed by Rev. Frank G. Gustafson of the "Church of the New Jerusalem" in Detroit. Nine guests were present, three of whom, Miss Ruth Farley, Edna Gurley and Aurora Stewart, were from out-of-town.

The bride was charmingly attired in a becoming gown of ashes-of-roses trimmed in gold lace and set off by a dainty necklace of pearls. After the ceremony, Mrs. Harris, assisted by Mrs. Mary Hammond and Miss Clara Daisy Barnes, served a most delightful three-course luncheon to the young couple and guests.

The groom is in the employ of Leitch & Crawford, butter and egg dealers in Detroit. The bride has just completed a term of teaching in the Ann Arbor public schools. The best wishes of scores of friends go with this deserving young couple to their new home in Detroit, where, temporarily at least, they will be at home to their friends at 58 West Grand Avenue, Highland Park.

STILL PLUGGING FOR CHARLEVOIX

Harold A. Cartier Thinks Next Season's Tennis Prospects Good

Harold A. Cartier, who is spending the winter in Dearborn, Mich., writes us that he is still interested in tennis in general, and, especially, prospective tournaments for Charlevoix next summer.

To bear out his statements concerning his interest in the game, he states that he was recently defeated in the second round of the state indoor tennis tournament now in progress at Detroit, by Joseph Dibley, sixth ranking player, score, 6-3, 6-4. The favored winner of the title is the obese and jovial F. E. Elwell, who was so popular with Charlevoix fans last summer. Elwell was defented in the semi-finals of the Charlevoix tournament by Geo. O'Connell.

The success of the tournament here last summer was due, in part, to the efforts of Cartier, and may result in our landing the state tournament next season.

VESPER SERVICE AT M. E. CHURCH

Auditorium Packed at Special Service Last Sunday

A church full of interested people met at the vesper service at the Methodist Episcopal church last Sunday afternoon at 4:15 p. m. The theme of the entire service was "The Soul of Abe Lincoln." The nearness of Lincoln's birthday anniversary made the occasion very attractive. Features of the service were a home scene of the past days, with father and mother lonely for their children to be with them for the celebration of the birth of the great emancipator; The grown-up children arrive singing, and a program of greetings, songs and Lincoln philosophy ensues. The pastor calls, and upon being asked for some information about Lincoln, speaks of certain books on that subject which he had recently read, among them a book by Bertide Babcock, entitled "The Soul of Abe Lincoln." His talk is a book sermon. Based upon this book, the pastor told them that the soul of Abe Lincoln shows forth in his patriotism, his pity for the negro, his sympathy for lovers of people and his fine appreciation of the life and teachings of Jesus Christ. Each of these salient facts was illustrated by scenes from the story that served as a basis for the sermon theme. People with breadth of sympathy such as Lincoln's are the people who do not lose their souls.

Home songs and patriotic fervor marked the entire service. As a closing feature, the choir and congregation sang the national anthem and the flag responded by flonting gracefully, and was roundly cheered again and again. The pastor also displayed a flag of the sixties with its thirty-four stars. It was a patriotic hour, and was largely arranged by Dr. F. F. McMillan, who is a great admirer of Abraham Lincoln.

BAPTIST CHURCH

The usual Sunday services will be held and a hearty welcome is given to all who wish to worship with us The pulpit editorials are always of general interest. The Italian situation will be reviewed in the morning service. In the evening, the question box will be answered. Last Sunday evening the following questions were asked and answered:

When and where was the Baptist denomination founded? Ans.—In Jerusalem on the day of Pentacost.

When and where was the first Baptist church in America founded, and for what purpose? Ans.—By Roger Williams at Providence, R. I., in 1639, to establish religious liberty and separate church and state.

Who was the first president of the Northern Baptist Convention? Ans.—Charles Evans Hughes.

Mid-week service on Thursday evening. An occasion of religious culture.

Dr. Burns is to address the Father-Sons banquet in Petoskey next Tuesday evening.

The growing coagregations of the past few weeks have been an encouragement to the workers. Bible school attendance has been from thirty to fifty per cent larger than on the corresponding Sundays one year ago. We realize that this does not in any way measure the efficiency of the work the school does, but it does indicate a widening sphere of influence, and the fidelity and regularity of teachers and officers denotes the efficiency.

The recent meetings of the Aid Society and the Women's Mission Circle have been well attended and afforded a delightful social occasion. Mesdames Richmond, Geer, Carey, O'Brien and Graham were recent hostesses.

The primaries, to the number of about thirty, enjoyed a party and sleigh ride meeting at the Harry Hooker home on Antrim street. They are to have another party at the church parlors next Saturday, and will play with St. Valentine.

C. A. C. Meeting Wednesday

Wednesday evening, February 17, is the date of the regular monthly meeting of the Charlevoix Association of Commerce, at the council room, 7:30 p. m. Several important matters are to be decided by its membership, the committees not wishing to take the initiative. It is business every person in Charlevoix should be interested in. Make an effort to attend the meeting.

COMMEMORATION OF DICKENS' BIRTHDAY

The members of the Dickens Club were entertained by the president of the club, Mrs. Harley Ochs, at a delightful luncheon, at her home on Clinton street, last Monday afternoon.

The scheme of decorations was in Chinese blue and yellow, the club colors. The affair was in commemoration of the birthday of Charles Dickens and one feature of the luncheon was a huge birthday cake, beautifully decorated and lighted with candles. The place cards were in the form of quotations from characters in Dickens' works and the assigning of these characters and the reading the quotations furnished an interesting feature of the entertainment. One new member was admitted to the club at this meeting.

The afternoon was spent in reading the personal letters written by Charles Dickens to John Forster, concerning his visit to America.

ago. Its accomplishments in freight cost savings and its success as a business venture even though its shipments on the Chicago-New Orleans route are "rail and water" instead of "all water," are used by Lakes-to-gulf waterway boosters as convincing argument for through barge service.

The Mississippi-Warrior service operates on two divisions—on the Mississippi from New Orleans to St. Louis and on the Warrior waterway from Birmingham, Ala., to Mobile.

Thousands of Tons In a Load

On the Mississippi river division are operated 40 2,000-ton barges, three 1,000-ton barges, five 500-ton barges, six tow boats of 2,000 horsepower each, three self propelled barges of 1,500 tons capacity and 1,200 horsepower each and two boats of 900 horsepower each. They have 7½ feet draft.

The large barges are 235 feet long by 45 feet wide. The self-propelled barges are 280 feet long by 48 wide. All equipment is of steel.

The barges operates in fleets of five to eight going down stream and three to five coming up stream, each fleet clustered around one tow boat. Downbound tows carry 10,000 to 15,000 tons of miscellaneous freight in one fleet. The 15,000 tons, however, is a record performanee.

Figure how much 15,000 tons means in terms of freight trains. Freight car capacities vary according to the bulk of the commodity handled. Coal cars will carry up to 70 tons. An ordinary freight car will hold from 10 to 15 tons of general merchandise, the capacity running higher if the freight is compact.

Twenty Trains In one Tow

On this bnsis a shipment of 15,000 tons in a single fleet would represent the capacity of 1.000 freight cars. Counting 50 cnrs to a train that would mean 20 trains.

A 10,000-ton fleet, according to this same figuring, would represent 666 freight cars, or 13 trains and 16 cars over.

Ability to handle big shipments of this size with one power plant and one crew is what is depended upon to restore waterway transportation to profitable competition with the railroads. Old river steamboating was swept into the commercial discard because it could not meet the railroads economically. Its carrying capacity and earning powers were not equal to its overhead.

Many persons have an idea the "palatial steamers" of the Mississippi were mighty freight carriers. As a matter of fact the oldtimers did well when they got away with around 300 tons. Later models could carry two or three times as much.

Do a little more figuring. If one Robert E. Lee carried 300 tons it would take 50 Robert E. Lees to carry 15,000 tons and 33 Robert E. Lees to carry 10,000 tons. And every Robert E. Lee would have to employ a full crew, including captain, pilots, firemen, deckhands and the rest. On the barge line one crew does the work of the 50 or the 33. And it is no larger than any one of the old crews. The towboats and self-propelled barges are oil burners and are equipped with labor-saving machinery. Their captains are pilots, too, and take their tricks at the wheel. Overhead is cut down to a frill-less minimum.

Two are scheduled to make the downbound trip from St. Louis to New Orleans, around 1,200 miles, in 11 days. It takes them about twice as long to come back north against the current.

Five Days to Orleans

Express service, corresponding to that given by the fast packets of old days, is furnished by the three self-propelled barges, the Gulfport, Mobile and Birmingham. They run by themselves, having no tows. They make the 1,200-mile trip from St. Louis to New Orleans in five days, leaving Friday night and arriving at the gulf port on Wednesday night. That's faster than freight cars normally move making the same trip. Coming back they take nine days. It is interesting to note that when the Robert E. Lee won its famous race with the Natchez in 1870 it made the run from New Orleans to St. Louis in 3 days, 18 hours and 14 minutes, but it must be remembered that it was in racing trim and stopped only for fuel.

Tow barges and self-propelled barges are equipped with hatches so they may be unloaded from above by cranes and like modern dock equipment. They also have side doors so freight may may be wheeled directly into freight cars on floating docks, as at the East St. Louis terminal.

The towboats and express barges are radically different from the old packets in other respects aside from their carriyng capacity. Their power plant, stacks, pilot houses and living quarters are away at the rear. They have twin screw propellers instead of paddle wheels. The screws operate in tunnels.

The towboats are all power plant and living quarters. They do not carry any freight. They also are tunnel type propeller boats. The method of towing on the river is not with a tow rope, as on the lakes. The barges are fastened directly to the towboat, in front of it and at the sides. It pushes instead of pulls.

Each towboat and self propelled barge has a wireless operator, who reports every three hours, giving information of position, the condition of the river, the number of barges being handled and the classification of the freight. In this way the various captains are kept in touch with the operating office at St. Louis and with the constant river fluctuations.

Now Making Money.

The Mississippi-Warrior service, nfter six years operation, is now making money.

"Our net profit for this past year is around $350,000," says Operating Manager J. P. Higgins of the Mississippi division. "This is the first profit we have shown on the books, but, as a matter of fact, we made money in 1924, too. The latter doesn't show in the reports because of the very large depreciation as well as interest charges the government requires us to set off against the investment. Our gross profit for the past year was between $650,000 and $700,000.

"Each year we have operated has shown a marked increase in freight tonnage. We began in 1919 with 106,000 tons and increased to 164,000 in 1920, to 443,000 in 1921, to 550,000 in 1922, to 710,431 in 1923, to 849,503 in 1924, and close to 1,000,000 tons in 1925.

"We have saved to shippers $1.40 a ton between St. Louis and New Orleans on an average of everything."

More about the character of freight handled by the Mississippi-Warrior service and about the saving to shippers will be given in a later article touching on the benefits which may be expected from the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway.

a Record Breaking Year ... and a still Greater Year to Come

With sales in excess of 250,000 cars, Dodge Brothers, Inc. have just completed the greatest year in their history.

Had it been possible to produce cars in sufficient numbers, their increase over 1924 would have been even more substantial.

This year the production problem has been mastered. A $10,000,000 expansion program stands completed—and the enormous output of 1925 will be nearly doubled!

Production on this stupendous scale makes possible the astounding low prices announced January 7th.

It makes them possible even though the car is better today than ever before. These are but a few of the vital refinements—

Rich and attractive new colors.
Absolute smoothness of engine operation.
A new snap and elasticity of operation throughout.
Smart and stylish new body lines.
Complete vision from every angle of the sturdy all-steel body.

Dodge Brothers Motor Car has always been an exceptional product. With these refinements, at these new prices, it is without question the greatest value Dodge Brothers have ever offered.

IRONTON

The men of Ironton finished the ice jobs Friday.

Wm. Johnson and Hiram Brock have new radios installed.

Miss Mildred Howe spent the week end with her parents in Charlevoix.

Mrs. Mat Allen spent a few days with her daughter, Mrs. Charles Dean last week.

Mrs. Hugh King and Miss Howe called at the Jackson home on Tuesday evening of last week.

Mrs. Brown, who is visiting her daughter, Margery Solomon of Traverse City fell and has a badly broken wrist.

Mrs. Louis Brown left last week for an indefinite stay with her daughter, Mrs. Clyde Solomon of Traverse City.

We are having a fine attendance at church. Come out and shake hands with us, and hear Mr. Mattson's message.

Every one was glad to see the snow plow come into Ironton last week, as the road has been impassable for sometime.

We see very little of Mrs. Jackon lately, but a light is seen shining forth in the wee hours of the morning. Perhaps the new radio will account for this.

The Ladies' Aid met with Mrs. Bridenstine last week with twelve ladies present. The ladies are all working diligently this winter. They will meet with Mrs. Mat Berry the 17th.

Nearly every one here has their ice up. Marion Jackson has the ice house filled for Breezy Point Farm. Henry Bridenstein put up the ice for Sweet Brier Farm and Oscar Ward put up the ice for all the cottages. Datus Dean and Ed. Cunningham have their ice up. The ice is about seventeen inches thick. Clarence Coblentz filled for Sequanota.

NORWOOD

Mont Withers and a party of hunters drove out to Norwood for a fox hunt one day last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Edd Gregory, who live near Charlevoix, visited Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Holecheck last Sunday.

Jos. Holecheck and a crew of men worked three days on M-11 last week. The road is in fair condition now so cars can get through.

George Lord is visiting his daughter, Mrs. Colen McKenzie and family at Charlevoix, also his daughter. Mrs. Chas. Resignol and family, of Petoskey, this week.

The Norwood Ladies' Aid Society have planned a program, after which refreshments will be served, for Friday night of this week, at the town hall in Norwood.

Mr. and Mrs. Morris Henry were surprised on Monday evening of last week, when a party of twelve of their friends from Atwood dropped in on them. The evening was spent in visiting and playing games, and refreshments were served. All enjoyed a good time.

Mrs. Fred Hull can no longer surprise her husband with a birthday party, as it has become an annual affair. Last Tuesday evening, about 36 friends and relatives gathered at their home and enjoyed a good time by playing cards and other games, also music and singing old time songs. Mrs. Margaret Hull, mother of the Hull family, sang "The Old Wooden Rocker," which was enjoyed by all, after which a fine pot luck supper was served which consisted of lots of good eats and a beautiful birthday cake with lighted candles. The guests departed at a wee hour, wishing Fred many more happy birthdays.

BAYSHORE

Henry Hair lost a Berkshire brood sow last week.

W. D. Hair hauled the last of his kiln wood on Friday, February 5.

Lawrence Sund and family visited at the home of W. D. Hair, January 31.

Vernon Jones is assisting Mr. Madison in his store at Petoskey this winter.

Mrs. Bessie Tillotson and family, and the O'Dell family are now out of quarantine.

A. B. Chew has arrived from southern Michigan just in time to help M. K. with his buzz wood.

Sam Shontz and Clifford Short are fishing through the ice off Bayshore. They report the fishing is none too good.

Arthur O'Dell has purchased the Lincoln Ford farm from S. Dodge and expects to move there this spring.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain real estate mortgage whereby the Power of Sale therein contained has become operative, which mortgage was given by John Pesek and Josephine Pesek, husband and wife, to Margaret M Harsha, which mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the County of Charlevoix, Michigan, July 5th, 1922 in liber sixty-four of Mortgages on page forty-one; and whereas the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of fourteen hundred eighty and 11 100 Dollars, together with an attorney fee of twenty-five dollars as provided for in said mortgage, and no suit or proceedings at law have been instituted to recover the money secured by said mortgage or any part thereof; and whereas the tax required by Statute to be paid on said mortgage was duly paid prior to the recording thereof.

Now therefore, notice is given that by virtue of the Power of Sale contained in said mortgage and the Statutes in such case made and provided, said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of the premises therein described or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy the amount then due thereon of principal and interest together with the attorney fee, costs and expenses of the foreclosure, at public auction to the highest bidder therefor at the front door of the Court House in the City of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix (that being the place where the Circuit Court for the County of Charlevoix is held) on the 20th day of February 1926 at ten o'clock in the forenoon on that day. The premises described in said mortgage being herein described as follows; to-wit:

All the north fractional half of the Southwest fractional quarter of Section Seven (7) in Township thirty-three (33) North of Range eight (8) West, containing eighty-two acres and 84-100 acres of land more or less according to the U. S. Survey thereof.

Dated November 16th, 1925.
Margaret M. Harsha,
Mortgagee.

Boyne City has a tentative proposition from a Chicago firm to locate a factory in Boyne City for the manufacture of women's and children's dresses. The factory will employ 300 people, all but 12 or 15 of which will be women, over ten months of the year, and distribute approximately $125,000 per year in pay roll alone. The business is not an experiment but a going concern, well established and making money.

According to a recent ruling by the state department of conservation, trolling with motorboats will be permitted in Elk and Torch lakes, Antrim county; Pine and Round lakes, Charlevoix county, Black lake, Ottawa county, Portage lake, Manistee county; White lake, Muskegon county; Lake St. Clair and any other lakes adjacent to the great lakes. Under the old regulations trolling with a motorboat was prohibited in any of the inland waters.

Almond Yettaw, an employe of the Charlevoix Coal & Ice Co., received a broken arm and other painful injuries Monday morning, while working at Widdifield's ice house. The ice jack upon which he was working jammed in some way, flying ice cakes knocking him from the skidway to the ground below. His arm was broken when he struck a timber support when falling and he narrowly missed being buried beneath more than a ton of ice which fell after the jam.

LOCAL FIRM TO ADD LINE OF FURNITURE

Hardware Co.'s Second Floor Will Be Used for Display

Chas. B. Gale and L. A. Cannon of the Charlevoix Hardware company, are in Grand Rapids this week, attending the Michigan hardware convention. While there they will purchase new stock for the concern's hardware and electrical departments and will also complete the buying for their new furniture and house furnishing departments.

The second floor of their building is being put in readiness for the big portion of the furniture stock, which will begin pouring in right after the first of March.

Mr. Cannon requests us to state to the public that, because of the Charlevoix Hardware company's entry into the furniture and house furnishing business, it is not the intention of the firm to discontinue any of their present lines—rather the hardware and electrical lines will be strengthened with the addition of many new and up-to-date items, as well as lines which have heretofore not been handled by them.

From present indications, 1926 will be a banner year for this community, and we view the expansion of this, one of our leading business concerns, as being in line with our promised prosperity.

DUVAL-BALDI COMPANY MADE A HIT

Program of Music and Magic Was Well Received

The Duval-Baldi company, a special number on the winter lecture course series, which played at the Palace theater Monday evening, February 8, exceeded all expectations and proved a source of enjoyment for all those present.

Duval, the magicinn of the company, greatly pleased the audience with his stunts of wizurdry and kept the house in continuous laughter by his accompaoiment of witty quips and jokes. Duval supplemented his magic with a novelty which he called "rag pictures," creating beautiful scenes from rags pieced together on a board. The feature was highly entertaining and well received by the audience. Joseph Baldi, accordionist, played a group of classical and popular pieces which received a hearty round of applause at the conclusion of each number. The program was one of high merit and was greatly enjoyed by those in attendance.

BOYNE CITY WINS A DOUBLE HEADER

Local Girls Lose 38 to 8—Boys by Score of 23 to 18

Last Friday night the local basket ball team won from Charlevoix. The girl's won by the score of 38 to 8, while the boys won by 23 to 18.

The girl's teum opened up their offensive after Charlevoix scored two points. They worked their best throughout the game. The offensive was fast and they all played a very good defensive game.

The boys opened up and looked like a real team during the first half. They piled up the score of 19 to 8 during that period. But Charlevoix came back strong in the last half. Their guarding was very good and their rolling offense worked fine. They gathered 10 points to Boyne's 4 during the last half. Boyne's defense cracked and everyone seemed to be up in the air, especially during the final minutes of the game. This was the fastest game that has been played on the local court this year.—Boyne Citizen.

SENIORS TOP LIST OF CLASS TEAMS

Trim Sophmores Saturday By the Score 14 to 6

Basketball fans witnessed two snappy games last Saturday evening at Hooker's garage, between the senior and sophomore and juniar and freshman basketball teams.

The freshmen walked off with the first contest of the evening, trimming the juniors by a score of 7 to 3. "Dick" Marshall was the high point man for the freshmen, making most of his team's counters. In the second game, the seniors added another to their string of victories, emerging victorious over the sophmores by a score of 14 to 6. Clare Usher was the high point winner for the seniors, making 8 of their points and was closely followed by Sharrow with 6 points. This gives the senior team the championship of the classes, they having gone through the season undefeated. The games were well attended.

For the United States, the total number of milk cows declined from 22,523,000 on January 1, 1925 to 22,290,000 on January 1, 1926, a loss of about one per cent. The number of heifers between one and two years of age declined about nine per cent, from 4,234,000 to 3,861,000 during the same period. The average value of milk is $57.37 as compared with $50.68 one year ago, the corresponding total values being $1,278,877,000 and $1,141,456,000.

All Cattle: The total number of head in the state on January 1 is estimated at 1,381,000 against 1,417,000 one year ago, the decrease being in the number of beef cattle and young stock. The average value per head is $50.99 and the total value, $70,417,000. On January 1, 1925 they were $46.50 and $65,890,000, respectively.

The total number in the United States is estimated at 59,829,000 and the total value, $2,297,510,000, being an average value of $38.40 per head. One year ago, the total number was 62,150,000 and the total value, $2,079,367,000, or an average of $33.46 per head.

Sheep: The census report on number of sheep is not yet available, hence no revision of the 1925 figures has been made. The estimated number on Michigan farms is 1,254,000 against 1,194,000 in 1925, a gain of five per cent. The average value is $11.50 per head, or a total of $14,493,000. One year ago, total value was $13,313,000, or $11.20 per head.

An increase in the sheep industry is also indicated for the entire country, the number on January 1, 1925 being estimated at 39,390,000 and on January 1, 1926, at 40,748,000. Values have also increased, the price per head on the corresponding dates being, $9.63 and $10.50, respectively. The total value one year ago was $379,302,000 and on January 1, 1926, $427,647,000.

Swine: A further decline of 10 per cent in the number of swine is noted in Michigan, the number on January 1, 1925 being 906,000 and on January 1, 1926, 815,000. The value of the latter is $13,203,000, or $16.20 per head. One year ago it was $12,684,000, or $14.00 per head.

The decline for the entire country during the year amounts to 8.2 per cent. One year ago, there were 55,769,000 on farms as compared with 51,223,000 on the first of this year. Notwithstanding this reduction, the total value is greater as prices are considerably higher. The average value per head on January 1, 1925 was $12.38, or a total value of $690,328,000. On January 1 of this year, the total value was $779,348,000 or $15.21 per head.

NEWS FROM ELLSWORTH AND VICINITY

ELLSWORTH

Mrs. Jnon Timmer has been on the sick list the past few days.

The Ladies' Aid met with Mrs. H. L. Dawson, on Thursday of last week.

L. O. Isaman has moved across the street into the cobblestone house, known as the Nelson residence.

Andrew Essenberg has completed the job of moving a barn for W. G. Patterson.

H. J. Sweet of Traverse City, was in this vicinity the first of the week buying cattle and hogs.

Mr. and Mrs. Ira Springstead spent the week end with relatives and friends in Central Lake.

The Traverse Bay Telephone company men were in town doing repair work, Wednesday and Thursday of last week.

ATWOOD

Your Valentine next Sunday.

M. Henry, our well man, is trying to get water for Garret Essenburg.

As far as we can learn, M-11 is [illegible] for traffic from Traverse City to Petoskey.

One of the greatest inconsistencies that we know of is for a man to preach to favor the temperance reform, and at the same time, to sanction the granting of license to men to sell that which will make drunkards.

Our genial friend, Jim Ison, of Eastport, is at all times curious to see things—having a high blood pressure to see the Charlevoix snow plow clean out the snow in the A. Elzinga cut, walked about 11 miles to see it. To date we haven't had an expression from him.

ANTRIM CITY

Mrs. Mason was a visitor at the Stott home, Monday.

Mr. Stott left for Gaylord, Sunday, where he will visit relatives and friends.

Effie and Martha Mason had supper at the Stott home, Thursday evening.

Mr. Brooks and family, also Mr. Robinson, had supper at the Stott home Tuesday evening.

Mont Withers and Ralph Bacot of Charlevoix, got tired of coming down the road, so they come down the lake in a Ford. It took them about two hours.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH
Rev. B. G. Mattson, Pastor

10:30—morning service with an address on "The Deeper Meaning of St. Valentine's Day, its human impulses and its divine contacts." The sermon should have a vital interest, especially to young people, and will contain illustrative allusions to many ancient and picturesque customs.

12:00—Sunday school.

5:30—Young people's Sunday evening gathering, followed by another travel set of lantern slides and lecture at 7:00 p. m., on "Our Youngest National Child, Porto Rico." An excellent and attentive audience, containing many young people and enger children, enjoyed the lecture of last Sunday.

The pastor expects to conduct services at the Ironton church next Sunday at 2:30.

WEEK'S BASKET-BALL RESULTS

FOUR TEAMS IN ACTION LAST FRIDAY NIGHT

C. H. S. Loses Fast Game to Soo—Seniors Add Another Victory to Their List

Charlevoix basketball teams were busy last week end, four games being played at different places in northern Michigan, and, with the exception of one encounter, turned in victories.

The high school traveled to the Soo last Thursday afternoon, and lost by a count of 26 to 22 on the Soo's court, in their game the following evening. The game was furiously contested throughout and the score was in doubt up to the final minutes. Charlevoix led at the end of the first half, score 16 to 13. From then on the score see-sawed back and forth, with the Soo coming out in the lead in the final minutes of the contest.

We figure this a pretty good showing for the local boys, considering the size of the court they practice on and the one upon which the game was played. Soo's floor is 92 by 60 feet, somewhat larger than the local court. According to reports, Soo used a large number of substitutes, with the result that the locals were wore down by a continual onslaught of fresh players. Although defeated in all but one game so far this season, the local squad has not lost confidence, and much is expected from them before the end of the tournament at Petoskey.

In their game at Ellsworth last Friday evening, the C. H. S. second team came out on the long end of a 17 to 7 score. From the looks of the material playing on the reserve squad, which is made up mostly of sophomores and juniors, it looks as though we have some splendid material for next year's team. The game at Ellsworth was fast from start to finish and was no walk-away for the locals.

The senior class team added another to their long string of victories last Friday evening at Hooker's garage, by taking the county normal five into camp by a score of 14 to 6. The game was very fast and well played, the light senior team showing their best against the heavier normal outfit. Clare Usher was the high point winner for the seniors, making 11 of their 14 points, with Miles starring by the normals. This gives the senior outfit undisputed championship of the class teams. The freshmen won the preliminary.

Last Friday evening, under the direction of Chas. Novak and Chas Marshall, the seventh graders invaded the East Jordan court and trimmed the East Jordan seventh graders by a score of 14 to 12, in a fast and very exciting game. It is reported that a larger crowd turned out to see the youngsters play than attendance at high school games. A return game will be played here sometime next week and the contest is looked forward to with much interest. The seventh graders have a snappy little outfit and display a good brand of basketball.

STATE ACCEPTS 1200 ACRE LAND GIFT

Another tract of Cobh & Mitchell Lumber company land, cut over last season, was accepted as a gift by the state conservation commission last week. The tract comprises 1,200 acres in Chandler township, Charlevoix county.

Other business of the commission included an agreement to take over a private fish hatchery at Grayling. The state will operate and enlarge to plant a certain percentage of fry in waters of the four counties adjoining the hatchery.

An order was issued, rescinding special closed season provisions for inland lakes as far as Lake St. Clair is concerned. The department order against trolling was also rescinded as applied to Torch and Elk lakes in Antrim county, and Pine and Round lakes, Charlevoix county.

NOTED INTERPRETER HERE FRIDAY

MISS EDNA MEANS COMES HIGHLY RECOMMENDED

Reading Entitled, "From the Passing Crowd," Depict Characters in Everyday Life

Miss Edna Means, noted interpretative reader, who is to appear at the Palace Theatre on the local Lyceum course Friday evening, February 19th, ranks among the foremost professional entertainers on the Lyceum and Chautauqua platform.

In a cleverly assembled group of readings, "From the Passing Crowd," Miss Means has drawn upon the people of real, everyday life for her inspiration. These readings are bound together with fitting introductions. The stories told and the characters depicted are taken from real life and human experiences—in fact, Miss Means' characters are such as you pass every day on the street. The stories are those you read in the faces and actions of people you come in contact with every day—stories that entertain, amuse and inspire and make you want to be a better neighbor and citizen. Her character sketches amuse and instill a friendly spirit of helpfulness and good-will towards others. No one will forget her presentation of the "whistling boy" or the farmer who would go back to the farm, two characters almost invariably included in her program.

Miss Means is an untiring student of human nature, and, to quote the Des Moines, Iowa, Register, "She has a wonderful voice, a charming personality and an unusual mastery of her art." She achieves a gratifying success in her every appearance.

Miss Means was secured for the local Lyceum course through the well-known Redpath Bureau, and her appearance here will be one of the outstanding features an the lyceum course this season. If you are looking for a real evening of entertainment, don't miss this number.

MISS McCALL ENTERTAINED HER FRIENDS

The Occasion Was Her Twefth Birthday Anniversary

Of course, as is usual on such occasions, the big cake with its 12 candles was the chief feature of the feast. And there were heaps of sandwiches and other goodies which were greatly enjoyed by the young folks. Games and various other forms of amusement filled out a jolly afternoan.

MANY WHO SHOULD PAY UP HAVE PASSED US UP

The first of the year the Courier mailed statements to all subscribers owing a year or more for the old home paper and the response has been good and we are more than pleased and feel that the paper is even appreciated more than we believed it could be.

These evidences of appreciation in the letters received are great encouragements for one to do his level best and many of them would be interesting reading for our readers as so many of them are former residents of our city and community and our people, of course, are as much interested in them as they are in their old home town.

There are many, however, who paid no attention to our request for payment of arrears. These will be billed again within the next week or so, with an urgent request to settle. It costs money to run a newspaper. We must meet our weekly pay-roll and running expenses. The limit of credit is just as strict with us as it meet our bills, but it is hard to do is with those who owe us. We MUST so when there are so many owing us. We ask those who are indebted to us to remit the amount they owe on receipt of statement.

BOOM MEANS MUCH TO MICH.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN TO BECOME SECOND FLORIDA

Wealthy Class of South Will Want to Come North to Escape Heat During Summer Time

The following article taken from a recent issue of the Boyne Citizen give one some idea of the big resort land boom headed toward Michigan as seen by a former resident of this section. We at home here do not seem realize the extent of the movement, and the day will soon arrive when this section will be eagerly sought as the ideal place to live during the summer months. Resort property even today is hard to get. Practically every foot of lake frontage from Ludington north to Cheboygan has changed hands during the last year. Plans for development are under way and we predict the summer season of 1926 will be the greatest season in the history of Northern Michigan:

"J. B. Wagner has received a letter from a friend who is a former resident of Michigan now vice president of a Florida bank maintaining at Tampa.

"He writes that in his opinion Northern Michigan will be a second Florida when it once gets into its stride. He also states that it is a surprise to him that the people of Northern Michigan do not seem to understand the possibilities and that the money that is being made in Florida does not stay there but is pouring North in a constant stream for automobiles, lumber, all kinds of building material, structural steel, millinery, fine clothes and everything that adds to the comfort and convenience of life, for all these things are made in the north. Thousands of men in Florida who have never thought of going north for the summer are now able to maintain summer homes in the north and they will go to the places that are best advertised.

"A delegation of 150 prominent people of Maine headed by the governor of that state, are leaving for Florida next week to get a line on what is being done there and to endeavor to learn how to get Florida people to go to Maine for the summer. Michigan could well afford to spend thousands of dollars in publicity and it should be done.

"He also states in this letter that the territory in which he resided when in Michigan, instead af being in the doldrums ought to be happy and prosperous with the money that should be left there by the tourists, but apparently no effort is being made to attract the visitor.

"The former Wolverine apparently is not familiar with the big campaign of the West Michigan and East Michigan tourists bureaus. Previously this advertising appropriation largely has centered in a circle from Chicago, Toledo and Cloveland south through Louisville, Chattanooga, St. Louis and Kansas City. This year, however, Florida will get special attention."

The Community Banquet to be given by the W. C. T. U. will be served in the M. E. church, Wednesday evening, February 24, at 6:30 p. m. Judge Parm C. Gilbert will speak. Community singing, music and other entertainment. Banquet 50c. The public is invited.—Adv. 7t1.

WHAT IS THIS GULF WATERWAY

ILLINOIS PLAN OF BIG CONERN TO ALL MICHIGAN

Lowering of Lakes Level By Chicago Draioage Canal Covered in Series of Articles

No. 7.

(By Arthur W. Stace.)

Does the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway need 10,000 cubic feet per second diversion of water from Lake Michigan for barge fleet navigation between Chicago and New Orleans?

Politicians, lobbyists and various ax-grinders are hollering that it does. They make no qualifications. They are not content to say they were asserting black is black and white is white. Doubtless most of them believe it themselves. By the sheer strength of their dogmatic positiveness, are spreading the misinformed conviction through the Mississippi valley that the 10,000 cubic feet per second diversion is absolutely essential to the Lakes-to-Gulf project and therefore the waterway must have it. They are seeking to create the same impression in congress.

Engineers Shy as to "Necessity."

But the engineering specialists who have studied the issue—even those connected with the Chicago Sanitary district and the Illinois State waterway—make no assertion that 10,000 c. f. s. diversion is essential to Lakes-to-Gulf navigation. The farthest they go is to point out how much better the diversion would make the waterway and how much money it would save the state of Illinois and the federal government in securing and maintaining a nine-foot channel. They emphasize that the 10,000 c. f. s. diversion is "desirable."—from their point of view—but with the caution of trained men accustomed to put facts above wishes they qualify all statements as to "necessity" setting forth, instead, figures to show the benefits arising from various degrees of diversion.

In considering the "need fnr navigation" issue it would be well to establish in mind the following facts:

Diversion of 4,167 cubic feet per second from Lake Michigan has been authorized by the government.

Temporary diversion has been authorized of 8,500 c. f. s. pending the construction of sewage treatment plants by the Chicago Sanitary district.

Actually the sanitary district is now diverting around 7,200 c. f. s., because the level of Lake Michigan has sunk so low that more can't be drawn into the drainage canal.

The official project depth of the Illinois State waterway is eight feet. of the Illinois river seven feet, of the Mississippi to St. Louis six feet, of the Mississippi from St. Louis to Cairo eight feet, and below Cairo nine feet.

Wherens the Lakes-to-Gulf project was until recently based on an eight-foot depth, the present effort is directed at a nine-foot depth to correspond with the nine-foot project in the Ohio river from Pittsburgh to Cairo.

Another point not officially established, but nevertheless definite enough to be taken into consideration is this:

Government engineers are seemingly inclined toward a modification of the 4,167 c. f. s. ruling as the high water mark for permanent diversion, some assuming that diversion may be established at 7,000 to 7,500 c. f. s.

Waterways involving lock systems need a certain fixed flow of water for three purposes; to operate the locks, to keep the channels filled to navigable depth, to keep the cost of construction within reasonable limits.

Not Needed for Lockage.

The Illinois State waterway, the only link in the Lakes-to-Gulf project requiring locks under present plans, needs only 1,000 cubic feet per second to operate its locks. It has 4,167 c. f. s. assured and 7,000 to 7,500 c. f. s. as a possibility. It doesn't need 10,000 c. f. s.

Moreover, the authorized 4,167 c. f. s., or the possible 7,500 will provide plenty of volume to fill up the pools behind dams in the state waterway. They will provide volume enough, too, for the channels in the Illinois and Mississippi rivers which are to be secured by dredging.

Just how much volume will be needed for these channels is a bit uncertain. Engineers have placed it as low as 1,000 c. f. s., the amount

MAKING GOOD IN FLORIDA CITY

REV. B. ATCHISON CLASSED AMONG "WHO IS WHO"

Enlarges Church Membership By 157 During Year's Pastorate in St. Cloud

Under the caption "People who are Making St. Cloud a City" appears a splendid write-up of the work of Rev. B. Atchison, pastor of the Baptist church at St. Cloud, Florida, in the St. Cloud Tribune, issue of January 21. Rev. Atchison occupied the pulpit of the local Baptist church for about 20 months some 14 years ago, going from here to Howell, Michigan. He was called to St. Cloud by unanimous vote of the church March 13, 1921.

During the five years he has been in St. Cloud, 157 new members have been added to the fellowship of the church, 54 by baptism, 88 by the letter and experience, and 15 who come under the watch-care of the church.

A brief sketch of the life of Rev. Atchison might be interesting to some: Converted in December, 1895; entered Moody Bible institute as a student in the fall of 1896; later appointed assistant superintendent of the large Rescue Missions in Chicago, having charge of five services every week besides holding open air service and meeting at the prison and the Cook county hospital every Sunday; after completing the work at school, part of two years were spent traveling on a Gospel Wagon all through the southern states, holding Gospel meetings wherever an opportunity presented itself whether it was in the church or out on the street around the Gospel Wagon. Following this experience that will never be forgotten, Mr. and Mrs. Atchison were both commissioned by the American Sunday School Union as missionaries in five counties in the western part of Michigan where they had the privilege of organizing about fifty Sundny schools some of which afterward developed into regular churches. Revival meetings were also held in most all of these places with the result that many souls were saved. Mr. Atchison was then ordained as a regular pastor of the Baptist denomination in October 1907 and during the last 18 years has held pastorates in the following places: Kinderhook, Englishville, Charlevoix, and Howell all in Michigan and Fort Lauderdale and St. Cloud in Florida. In theology he belongs to the old school and is not ashamed to be classed with those that are called "Fundamentals."

M. P. A. SUMMER MEETING AT HARBOR SPRINGS

Michigan Newspaper Men to Visit Resort Region

Members of the Michigan Press Association and their wives, numbering over a hundred, will hald their summer meeting in Harbor Springs, guests of the Chamber of Commerce of that city.

The meeting will he held sometime in June with headquarters at the Wequetonsing Hotel, and entertainment features at Romona Park and Emmet Hotels.

FIFTY-TWO GUESTS AT MILLER HOME

HOSTESS WEDNESDAY AT PRIVATE HOUSE GATHERING

Subject of Factories Brought Up in Original Suggestion—Enjoyable Program and Dinner

One of the largest private house gatherings of the winter season was royally entertained by Mr. and Mrs. W. Herschel Miller at their Belvedere avenue home last Wednesday evening. Including members of the South Side Circle, guests and children, 52 were present and all were seated at once, made possible by a clever arrangement of tables.

After a graciously served and thoroughly enjoyable dinner, the following entertainment was given: Charades by the hostess and her daughter, Gwendolyn, humorous readings by Mrs. Ernest Dawson and Mrs. W. J. Stevenson, a very clever Hottentot story by Mrs. Mattson, a stunt by Mrs. W. G. Parker, and a spring bonnet parade in which each lady wore a misfit hat at a rakish angle.

Dr. Mattson read a humorous article by Ralph Price, bard of Ironton and embryo cannery magnate, which was published last spring in the Michigan Farmer. It was branded: "She Gave a Sou to a Sioux at the Sault." It is full of keen satire and is a clever description of a trip to Soult Ste. Marie from the bustling city of Ironton. How Ralph (or Harv Hess, as he calls himself) and his friend Al (with their "girls") "did" the locks proved very instructive and amusing.

While the subjects of factories is mentioned occasionally in connection with Charlevoix county progress, it might be well to consider an original suggestion by a guest of the evening, who deplores the utter waste of so much wit exuding through the genial and versatile Mr. Price, like an unharpessed waterfall that later lights a state. Why not form a company and put out an article with a label that needs no explanation: "It is to laugh! Ralph Price's Original Condensed Wit. Try a Can on Blue Monday Morning. Ironton Fun Condensery, Ironton (or Charlevoix), Mich."

You scoffers needn't scoff. We suppose you are the kind who 30 years ago condemned the Chinese for pinching their daughter's feet while your own girls heroically reduced their waist lines and swept the streets with their skirts. You would have ridiculed the possibility of aviation, motion pictures, the phonograph and radio. Let us then expand and welcome Ralph Price's Fun Factory.

But to return to this happy gathering. Guests present were: Dr. and Mrs. B. C. Mattson, Mr. and Mrs. James L. Gaskin, Mrs. Mary Shores with a wonderful cake, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. FIRE WIPES OUT CLARION STORES

G. W. Taylor and Barney Kleinhenz Losers as Result.

A disastrous fire at about eleven o'clock Saturday night totally destroyed the hotel of G. W. Taylor and the general store and garage of Barney Kleinhenz at Clarion. These were practically the only business places in the village, which is now without a store of any kind.

The fire is thought to have started in the garage and spread rapidly to the store and hotel, both two-story frame structures. A large force of volunteer fire fighters, including members of the Petoskey fire department and other from that city, worked bravely to check the spread of the flames and were able to save the depot, working with buckets and snow shovels, the only implements available.

Mr. and Mrs. Taylor, who were the only occupants of the hotel at the time, were able to save but few of their belangings, and nothing was saved from the store and garage.

The losses are said to be partly covered by insurance, but no information can be obtained as to whether the structures will be rebuilt or not.

Quaker Oats "stands by" you through the morning

Has the "bulk," too, that makes laxatives seldom needed

THOUSANDS have ineffective mornings because they start the day with breakfasts lacking in certain important food elements.

To feel your best you must have a well-balanced, complete breakfast. Rather, At most other meals—lunch and dinner—you get it. But breakfast is a hurried meal, often badly chosen.

Thus Quaker Oats, containing 16% protein, food's great tissue-builder, 68% carbohydrate, its great energy element, plus all-important vitamin B and the "bulk" that makes laxatives seldom needed, is the dietetic urge of the world today.

It is food that "stands by"—you through the morning. Quick Quaker cooks in 3 to 5 minutes. That's faster than plain toast. Don't deny yourself the natural stimulation this rich food offers you.

Zoe, the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Burnett, had one bone in her lower right arm fractured last week.

AT THE MOVIES

Bert Lytell is Opposite Alma Rubens in New Film

"The Gilded Butterfly," the Fox film production coming to the Palace Theatre, Saturday, February 20, for 2 days, is an fascinating story of the inside of society, featuring Alma Rubens and Bert Lytell in the two principal roles.

Alma is the lovely society butterfly, who almost singes her wings. She is typical of many of the daughters of today, raised, in surroundings far beyond their parents' means, to expect the best things of life, unable to face reverses and disillusionment in a cool-headed manner.

Bert is a young American officer anxious for a berth in the diplomatic service. He is clean-cut and idealistic and different from any other man Alma has ever met. She falls in love with him and this love changes her whole attitude towards life.

Two English Players in American Film

Two of the typically American roles in "Silent Sanderson," Hunt Stromberg's latest Harry Carey production, which comes to the Palace Theatre for one run next Wednesday, February 24, are strangely enough, very aptly portrayed by two distinctly English players.

They are Edith Yorke, long recognized as one of the most gifted character actresses in the industry, and Gardner James, a sympathetic juvenile.

A new costume novel by Howden Smith is an event of no mean importance. But a pirate story which includes many of the famous Robert Louis Stevenson's characters from "Treasure Island"—Lank John Silver, Pew, Billy Bones and the rest—is in the nature of a literary banquet.

"Porto Bello Gold" is a swashbuckling, blood-curdling tale of piracy on the Spanish Main. It is a combination of brave deeds and shameful; friendship, love, hate and high adventure in point of time, the action takes place a few years previous to that of Stevenson's masterpiece and tells, in fact, of how Captain Flint and "Rip-Rap" Murray raided the Spanish gold galleon and buried their ill-gotten treasure on the lonely island known as the Dead Man's Chest—the inspiration for the well-known pirate song, "Fifteen Men on the Dead Man's Chest. Yo-ho-ho and a Bottle of Rum!"

Sir Harry Johnston, a few years ago, startled the literary world with "The Gay Dombreys," a continuation of Dickens' "Dombey and Son." Howden Smith, however, is even more intrepid in attempting to preface a great masterpiece with a story of his own. He has succeeded to an extraordinary degree, the consensus of critical opinion being that "Porto Bello Gold" is a worthy companion to "Treasure Island."

The story is not and does not pretend to be Stevenson's in any particular. Howden Smith has simply availed himself of a number of the characters in the earlier tale and of several situations which Stevenson referred to as episodes of the past and with which he and his characters had no immediate concern. For example, there is the character and part in the plot of the boy, Darby McGraw. Stevenson merely makes passing mention of him, but in Howden Smith's story he supplies the interest which Jim Hawkins supplies in the Stevenson story—that is, the juvenile adventure element and the reactions of a boy to the glamour and realities of pirate life.

CHAPTER I

My Father's Secret.

I was in the counting room, talking with Peter Corlaer, the chief of our fur traders—he was that very day come down river from the Iroquois country—when the boy, Darby, ran in from the street.

"The Bristol packet is in, Master Robert," he cried. "And, oh, sir, the watermen do say there be a pirate ship off the Hook!"

I remember I laughed at the combination of awe and delight in his face. He was a raw, bog-trotting bit of a gossoon we had bought at the last landing of bonded folk, and he talked with a brogue that thickened whenever he grew excited.

"For the packet, I do not doubt you, Darby," I answered. "But you must show me the pirate."

Peter Corlaer chuckled in his quiet, rumbling way, his huge belly waggling before him beneath his buckskin hunting shirt, for all the world like a monster mold of jelly.

"Ja, ja, show us der pirates," he jeered.

Darby flared up in a burst of Irish temper that matched his tangled red hair.

"I would I were a pirate and had you at my mercy, you butter tub," he raged. "I'll warrant you'd tread the plank!"

"Darby," said I, "have you done the errands my father set you?"

"Every one," answered he.

"Very well. Then get you into the storeroom and sort over the pelts Peter fetched in."

He flung off with a scowl as I turned to Peter.

"My father will wish to know the packet arrived," I said. "Will you go with me to the governor's? The council must be on the point of breaking up, for they have been sitting since noon."

Peter heaved his enormous body erect. And I marveled, as always after a period of absence, at his proportions. To one who did not know him he seemed a butter tub of a man, as Darby had called him—a mass of tallow, fat flubs, a pork barrel of a trunk, a fat slab of a face upon which showed tiny, insignificant features grotesquely at variance with the rest of his bulk. His little eyes peered innocently between rolls of fat which all but masked them. His nose was a miniature dab, above a mouth a child might have owned.

But under his layers of blubber were concealed muscles of forged steel, and he was capable of the agility of a catamount. The man had not lived on the frontier who could face him hard-handed and escape.

"Ja," he said simply. "We go."

He stood his musket in a corner and slipped off powder horn and shot pouch the while I donned hat and greatcoat, for the air was still chilly and there was a scum of snow on the ground. We passed out into Pearl street and walked westward to Hanover square, and there on the farther side of the square I spied my father, with Governor Clinton and Lieutenant Governor Colden.

And it made my heart warm to see how these and several other gentlemen hung upon his words. There had been those who shuddered him during the uproar over the '45, for he was known to have been a Jacobite in his youth; but his friends were more powerful than his enemies, and I joy to think that he was not the least influential of those of our leaders who held New York loyal to King George when many were for casting in our fortunes with the Pretender.

He saw Peter and me as we approached and waved up to him, but at the same moment there was a slight disturbance on the eastward side of the square, and another little group of men came into view surrounding a grizzled, ruddy-cheeked old fellow, whose salt-stained blue coat spoke as eloquently of the sea as did his rolling gait. I could hear his hearse, roaring voice clear across the square—

"—ran him, tops'ls down; —— my eyes, I did; and when I get to port, what do I find, but not a king's ship within—"

My father interrupted him:

"What's this, Captain Farraday? Do you speak of being chased? I had thought we were at peace with the world."

Captain Farraday discarded the listeners who had attended him so far and stumped across the square, bellowing his answer in tones which brought shopkeepers to their doors and women's heads from upper windows.

"Chased? That I was, Master Ormerod, by as ——, scoundrelly a pirate as flouts the king's majesty! The ——"

Here he perceived who accompanied my father. Off came his hat, and he made an awkward bow.

"Your sarvent, your excellency! My duty, Master Colden! But I have no words to withdraw, for all I did not see who was near by to hear me. Aye, there is more to be said, much more; and matters have come to a pritty pass when the rascals come north to these ports."

Peter Corlaer and I joined the little group of merchants who were with the governor and the other curious persons hovered as close as they dared.

"But I find this hard to give credence to, captain," said Governor Clinton pleasantly enough. "Pirates? In these latitudes? We have not been bothered by such of late. Did you have sight of the ship which pursued you?"

"Sight? Marry, that I did; and uncomfortable close, your excellency. She came up with a so'easter two days past, and at the first I made her out for a frigate by the top hamper she carried."

"I Made Her Out for a Frigate."

"A frigate?" protested Master Colden. "So big as that?"

"Aye, sir, my master! And if I have any eye for a ship's lines and canvas she was none other than the Royal James that chased me three days together when I was home bound from the West Indies in '43."

"That would be the vessel of the fellow known usually as Captain Rip-Rap," spoke up my father, and there was a quality in his voice which led me to regard him closely.

It was manifest that he labored in the grip of some strong emotion; but the only indication of this in his face was a slight rigidity of feature, and none of the others marked it. I was the more amazed because my father was a man of iron nerves, and also, though his earlier years had been starred with a series of extraordinary adventures, so far as I knew he had had nothing to do with the sea.

"True for you, Master Ormerod," answered Captain Farraday; "and since Henry Morgan died there hath not lived a more complete rogue. One of my mates was taken by him off Jamaica ten years gone and cites him for a man of exquisite dress and manners that would befit a London macefront, God save us! And, moreover, a as arrant a Jacobite as ever was. Witness the name of his ship."

"I have heard he sails usually in company," remarked my father.

"He works with John Flint, who is no less of a rascal, albeit rougher, according to those unfortunates who have fallen in his path. Flint sails in the Walrus, a tall ship out of Plymouth that was on the Smyrna run before she fell into his hands. Betwixt them they are a pretty pair."

Captain Farraday stopped perforce for breath, and Governor Clinton seized the opportunity to ask with a smile:

"Captain Rip-Rap, did you call your oarsmen? What manner of name is this?"

The merchantman shrugged his shoulders.

"Nobody knows, sir. But 'tis the only name he goes by. I ha' heard that years past—oh, it may be twenty or more—he stopped a home-bound Chesapeake packet, and when the master was hailed aboard the first question he asked was 'did he have any rip-rap in his cargo?' For it seems he is singularly partial to that mixture of stuff. And now, I ha' been told, his own men give him this name, for even they do not know for certain that to which he was born.

"'Tis said he was a gentleman who suffered for his political convictions, but that is as like to be a lie as the truth. All I know is that he chased me in past the Hook, though the Anne showed him a clean pair o' heels and had run him tops'ls down wi' sunrise this morning. And when I made the harbor, 'twas to find there was not a king's ship to send after him."

"Yes," nodded the governor; "the Thetis frigate sailed for home with dispatches a week ago. But I will send express to Boston, where Commodore Burrage lies, and bid him to get to sea without loss of time. Doubt not, our good commodore will make them rue the day."

And with Lieutenant Governor Colden and the rest he made to move off. Only my father lingered.

"You have letters for me, Captain Farraday?" he asked.

"Aye, indeed, sir—from Master Allen, your agent in London. I was on my way to deliver 'em. And a goodly store of swords, axes, knives, beads, hoods, tilts and other trade goods to your account."

"I will accept the letters at your hands, and even save you the trip to Pearl street, captain," replied my father. "My son, Robert, here, will visit you aboard ship in the morning and take measures to arrange for transshipping your cargo."

"I ha' no quarrel with such terms," rejoined Captain Farraday, fishing a silken-wrapped packet from his coat tail pocket. "There you are, Master Ormerod. And I'll be off to the George tavern for a bite of shore food and a nog of mulled ale."

My father fidgeted the packet in his hands for a moment.

"You are certain 'twas Captain Rip-Rap who chased you?" he asked then.

"I'd swear to his foretops'ls," answered Farraday confidently. "As I said afore, he chased me once in '43, and Jenkins he took off Jamaica in the ship Cynthia out o' Southampton, when Flint was for drowning the lot o' them; but Rip-Rap, in his cold way, says there was no point to slaying without purpose, and they turned 'em loose in the longboat. And there's none left 'on the Account' that sail in a great ship fit to be a king's frigate, save it be Rip-Rap—Flint's Walrus is a tall ship and heavy armed, but hath not the sail spread o' the Royal James. Jenkins says she was a Frenchman, and 'tis to be admitted she hath the fine-run lines the Frenchies build."

My father was hard put to it to make head against this flow of talk, but at last he succeeded.

"It was my understanding," he said, "that Captain Rip-Rap disappeared from the West Indies during the late war. I give you thanks, captain. Pray call upon me at your leisure, and if I can be of any service to you I am at your command."

Captain Farraday stumped off toward the Coffee [illegible], a tail of the curious

Vast Expansion and Advanced Equipment make New Prices Possible

A better and better product followed by greater and greater demand.

To meet that demand, an expansion of buildings and equipment involving an expenditure of more than $10,000,000.

Output vastly increased, with consequent reduction in the cost of materials and production.

Installation of advanced labor-saving and quality-increasing equipment. For instance, one giant steel-body press costing $10,000 replaces ten former presses costing $7,500 each, and does the work more efficiently.

Result: The finest line of vehicles in Dodge Brothers history at prices that seem incredible in view of Dodge Brothers traditional quality—

That seem more incredible still when considered in connection with improvements that include—

Rich and attractive new colors.
Smart and stylish new body lines.
Four dependable cylinders.
Absolute smoothness of engine operation.
Greater power, snap and elasticity.

And advanced steel body and windshield construction that afford exceptional driving vision at a time when clear vision and safety are paramount in the mind of every motorist.

1905  1926

A man of seventy years and a boy of twenty went out together for an evening's entertainment. Each of them spent $10 having a good time. But what actually happened? The elderly man spent perhaps a little more than $10, possibly as much as $20. But the boy spent not less than $40 and possibly as much as $90! Why? Because he had probably fifty years ahead of him in which that $10, if saved, could have been earning interest. In a savings account or in later investments it would have doubled itself a number of times.

LOCAL MEN ACQUIRE LAKE SHORE FRONT

Property To Be Platted and Sold Into Lots

Charles H. Emrey and Harry K. Graves closed a deal on Tuesday morning of this week, making them joint owners of a tract of land on the lake shore drive, immediately west and adjoining the Boulder Park subdivision, now being developed by E. A. Young.

The property purchased comprises approximately 33 acres, with an 80-rod frontage on Lake Michigan. Four natural terraces rise from the lake shore back to the south boundary of the tract, ending on a high ridge overlooking the lake. The piece is thickly wooded with white birch and adapts itself beautifully to the purpose for which it is intended. Mr. Emrey states that the property will be platted into lots in the near future and development will start in the spring.

The land was acquired from L. S. See, George H. VanPelt and the Nicholls estate, the deal being handled by the Charlevoix County Bank.

W. C. T. U. NOTES

The February meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held last Friday at the home of Mrs. Charles Novak, with a good attendance of members and visitors.

The reports of committees and department superintendents showed that good work had been done during the month. The Traveler's Aid Work, formerly in charge of the Red Cross, was taken over and assigned to the evangelistic department.

A sketch of the life of Frances E. Willard was read by Miss Metcalf and an offering taken for the Willard Memorial Fund, which is used for national extension work. A picture was shown of Miss Willard's statue in the Hall of Fame at Washington, D. C. She is the only woman so honored.

The paper of the day was presented by Mrs. E. E. Cross on the topic, "The Bible in the Public Schools." A few paragraphs quoted from the paper will be of interest to many who are thinking on the subject of religious education.

"The principle of religious freedom which insures the separation of church and state is precious. It touches bed-rock in its truth. It is a guarantee of our liberty. But the rule of separation of church and state must not be so construed as to render the state a fosterer of non-religion or atheism. Yet that is just what we are in danger of doing in America today.

"Public school men, business men and educators are becoming concerned about this situation. Various experiments are being made looking to a better correlation of religious and public education. In some places courses of biblical literature and history are offered in the public schools. In many more communities, credit is given by the schools for Bible study or religious education conducted by other agencies. The plan which has met with most favor is that whereby the public schools grant an hour or two of time from their weekly schedule, during which children may be taught in schools of religion maintained by the churches. This movement was first effective in Gary, Indinna, and is rapidly spreading. Such week-day schools of religion are now conducted in more than one thousand cities, towns and rural communities. The state of Minnesota recently passed a law empowering local school boards to excuse children from public school attendance for not more than three hours a week for this purpose.

"Let the children agree on an educational policy with respect both to their own teaching and to the sort of recognition that they desire for religion in and by the public schools; let them do their share of education in a way that merits recognition, and a fit measure of recognition will be made possible and will almost certainly follow."

A social hour followed the meeting and refreshments were served by the social department.

The St. Mary's Altar Society will give a St. Patrick's supper, Wednesday, March 17th. Place will be announced later.—Adv. 7-tf.

IRENE McCANN ENTERTAINS GIRL FRIENDS

The home of Mr. and Mrs. John McCann was the scene of a very enjoyable St. Valentine's party last Saturday evening, when their daughter, Miss Irene, entertained eight of her young lady friends.

After what was termed by the girls as a "wonderful feed," a valentine box was brought out and the guests drew names for the token held within, some of which were of a humorous nature and the cause of much merriment. The young ladies then attended the theatre in a body and there rounded out an evening of fun.

The lucky guests were the Misses Jessie Allen, Mary McCann, Madeline Lemieur, Marion Bartlett, Geraldine Halverson, Lila Heise, Dorothy Fairchild and Lucille Usher, who all voted the party a great success.

at his heels, and I grinned to myself at thought of the strong drink they would offer him in return for his tale. There was no clearance of his being sober inside of twenty-four hours.

My father nodded absently to Peter, who had stood throughout the entire conversation, his flat face sleepily imperturbable.

"I like it not," he muttered, as if to himself.

Peter gave him a quick look but said nothing.

"Is there anything wrong, father?" I asked.

He frowned at me, then stared off at the housetops in a way he had, almost as if he sought to peer beyond the future.

"No—yes—I do not know."

He broke off abruptly.

"Peter, I am glad you are here," he added.

"Ja," said Peter vacantly.

"You have not looked at your letters yet," I reminded him.

"I have no occasion to," he retorted. "There is that which—but the street is no place for such conversation. Come home, my boy; come home."

Darby McGraw met us at the door, and from his wild gaze I knew him to be half expecting to see the pirates hog-tied at our heels.

"Have you performed your tasks, Darby?" questioned my father.

"Yes, master."

"Be off with you, then. I wish not to be disturbed."

"See can you find us late news of the pirates, Darby," I added as he allpped by.

He answered me with a merry scowl, but my father spun on his heel.

"What mean you by that, Robert?" says he.

I was nonplussed.

"Why, naught, sir. Darby is daft as pirates. He—"

Peter Corlner shut the room-door upon the Irish boy and came toward us, moving with the swift stealth that was one of his most astonishing characteristics.

"Ja, he does not know," he said.

"What?" challenged my father.

"What you and I know," returned the Dutchman calmly.

"So you know, too, Peter?"

"Ja."

I could restrain my impatience no longer.

"What is this mystery?" I demanded. "I thought I knew all the secrets of the business; but sure, father, I never thought to hear that we were connected as a fleet with pirates!"

"You are not," my father answered curtly. "This is a matter of which you [illegible] ing, Robert, because until now there has been no occasion for you to know of it."

He hesitated.

"Peter," he went on, "must we tell the boy?"

"He is not a boy; he is a man," said Peter.

I flashed my gratitude to the fat Dutchman in a smile, but he paid no attention. My father, too, seemed to forget me. He strode up and down the counting room, hands under the skirts of his coat, head bowed in thought. Tags of phrases escaped his lips:

"I had thought him dead—strange if he bobs up again—here is a problem I had never thought to face—mayhap I exaggerate—it cannot have significance for us—Certes, is must be accident—"

"Neen, he comes for a purpose," interrupted Peter.

My father stayed his walk in front of Peter by the fireplace, wherein blazed a heap of elm logs.

"Who do you fancy this Captain Rip-Rap to be, Peter? Speak up! You were right when you said Robert is no longer a boy. If there is danger here, he deserves to know of it."

"Andrew Murray!" mused my father. "Aye, 'twould be he. I have suspected it all these years—held it for certainty. But I made sure when he failed to show himself after the last war that Providence had intended to him. It seems I was wrong."

"Whoever he is, this pirate can do no harm to us in New York," I made bold to say.

"Be not too sure, Robert," admired my father. "He happens to be your great-uncle."

He reached up to the rack over the fireplace and selected a long clay pipe, which he stuffed with tobacco the while I was recovering from my astonishment.

"Your uncle?" I gasped then.

"No; your mother's."

"But he was the great trader who conducted the contraband trade with Canada?" I cried. "I have heard of him. 'Twas he established the Doom trail to enable him to supply the French fur traders with goods to wean the far savages from us. You have told me of him yourself, as hath Master Cobden. 'Twas he whom you and Corlner and the Iroquois fought when you broke down the barriers of the Doom trail and won back the fur trade to our people. Why, 'twas then you—you—"

I knew the deep feeling my father still had for my long-dead mother, and I scrupled to stir his memories. He himself took the words from my lips.

"Yes, 'twas then I came to love your mother. She—she was not such as you would expect to find allied by any ties with so great a scoundrel. But she was his niece—just could, Robert. She was a Kerr of Fernleside; her mother had been Murray's sister. Kerr and Murray were out together in the '15; Kerr fell at Sheriffmuir. His widow died not long afterward, and Murray took poor waif Marjory.

"He did well by her—there's no denying that. But he always intended to use her to further his own designs. He had a cold eye for the future, with no thought except of his own advantage, and if I— But there's no need to go into that. You know, Robert, how Corlner and the Seneca chief, Tawannears—he who is now the Guardian of the Western Door of the Long House—and I were able to smash the vast power Murray had built up on the frontier.

"We smashed him so utterly, discrediting him too, withal, that he was obliged to flee the province; and even his friends, the French, would have none of him—at least, aboveboard. I have always fancied he still served their interests at large; for he is at bottom a most fanatical Jacobite, and eke sincere in a queer, twisted way. Aye, there is that about him which is difficult to understand, Robert. Himself, he hath no hesitation in believing he serves high purposes of state in all he does."

"Only a madman could lay claim to serving the state as a pirate," I objected.

"You speak with overconfidence," rebuked my father. "There are men alive today who can remember when Morgan and Davis and Dampier and many another brave fellow of the same kidney lived by piracy and served the king at one and the same time. Some of 'em were hung in the end, and Morgan died a knight. It can be done."

"How?"

Consider, my boy! Murray—your great-uncle, mind you!—is a Jacobite. For our present government he hath only hatred and contempt. Any means by which that government was undermined would seem to him justifiable as aiding to bring about its downfall. Look to the fantastic humor of the man in naming his ship the Royal James!"

"If he be, indeed, the man you think he is," I returned, none too well pleased with the thought of having a pirate for a great-uncle. My father laughed kindly and tapped me on the knee with his free hand.

"I know how you feel, dear lad," he said. "'Twas so identically your mother talked. Bless her heart! We were fresh married when the precious rascal sent us by one of his tarry-tricks that necklace which lies now in my strong box—the loot of some Indian queen mayhap. In his way he cared for her, and he took much interest in all she did. By hook or crook he had word of us, however far he wandered. He knew when you were born. He knew when she died. And now that you have reached manhood he shows his sails outside Sandy hook. I do not know what it means, Robert, but I like it not! I like it not!"

"But we are not at sea!" I protested. "We are in New York. There are soldiers in Fort George. Commodore Burrage will be down from Boston, soon. What can a pirate ship, what can two pirate ships, effect against us? Why, the city train bands—"

"'Tis not force I dread," my father cut me off. "'Tis the infernal cleverness of a warped mind."

"Ja," agreed Peter.

My father thrust the stem of his pipe toward him.

"You feel it, too, old friend?" he cried then.

"If Murray is here he means no good," the Dutchman answered portentously. "No pirates come nort' in der cold weather for just fun. Neen! Here is too much danger; no places to run and hide."

"At the least we are on the alert," I said.

My father laughed, and Corlner's ridiculous, stupefying giggle echoed his grim mirth.

"An intelligent foe discounts so much upon launching his venture," my father answered. "Let us hope we have a modicum of luck to aid us. Whatever plan Murray hath in trend 'twill come to us unexpected and adroit in execution. But mush! There's the dinner bell. A truce to foreboding!"

CHAPTER II

The One-Legged Man and the Irish Maid.

The next morning I was occupied for several hours in checking over the needs of our trading stations with Peter Corlner, so that it was the middle of the forenoon before I was able to leave the counting room to go aboard Captain Farraday's ship and concert with her people the lightering of that portion of the cargo which was destined for our warehouse.

Darby McGraw eyed me so wistfully when I took my hat that I sent him to the kitchen to secure a bag of fresh-killed chickens and winter greens, knowing such food would be welcome to sailors after a long voyage, and bade him carry it to the dock.

We walked down Pearl street to Broad street, where the landing basin indents the land; and I was passing on, with intent to secure a wherry from the foot of Whitehall street to row me out to the Bristol packet, when Darby drew my attention to the soaring masts and tangled cordage of a great ship lying at anchor in the East river anchorage.

"'Tis a frigate, Master Robert!" he exclaimed.

There was no mistaking the rows of painted gun-ports and the solid bulwarks; and for a moment I fancied Commodore Burrage had anticipated our needs. Then the flag at her mizzen truck rippled out, and I beheld the red-and-gold banner of Spain.

"D'ye suppose he hath come after the pirate?" whispered Darby, all agog.

"Not he," I answered, laughing. "'Tis a Spaniard, and he and his kidney are not hungry for pirate gore. But look, Darby! There's another strange vessel—beyond the frigate."

I pointed to a tattered little brig with patched and dirty sails and a spatter of white showing in her black-painted hull where a round shot had sent the splinters flying.

"And he hath seen the pirates, or I am amiss," I added. "His escape must have been exceeding narrow."

Darby's eyes waxed as large as a cat's in the dark.

"Whurra, whurra, do but look at the shot hole in the side of him! 'Tis he will have made a noble prayer. And now will ye mock me for saying there are pirates abroad, Master Robert?"

"Not I, Darby. You fellow has been closer to death than I like to think of," I answered.

"Now there was as true a word as ever was heard spoke," proclaimed a pleasant voice behind me. "And shows most unaccountable understanding and humanitee, so it do, seeing as there's precious few landsmen as stops to figger out the chances a poor sailor must take and never a thankee from his owners nor aught but curses from his skipper, like as not. 'Tis as true, young gentleman. I makes you my duty, and says as how, seeing I was one of them vouchsafed a miraculous salvation, I hopes you'll permit me to offer my most humble thanks."

Michigan Railroads Welcome Good Roads

MICHIGAN is one of the states that has made the greatest progress by the extension of its good roads. Its industrial importance has been greatly fortified by the development of a system of internal communication. It can still advance under a careful and judicious extension of this program. With the passing of transportation from the mud age to the hard road age there are indications that we are experiencing in the United States an industrial revolution as important in its effect as was that which marked the introduction of the macadam road and the steam railroad in England. This is evinced in the expansion of our national income.

For instance, the wealth of our nation—investment on our plant—in 1912 was 186 billions of dollars while our national income—the annual turn-over—was 30 billions of dollars.

It took a six-dollar investment to make a dollar in 1912.

It took only a four-dollar investment to make a dollar in 1922. An increase in efficiency of 33 per cent. in a decade.

THE utility of the railroad, as a freight carrier, has been increased many times through the complementary agency of the good roads system. The traffic in the old days could only be drawn from about eight miles on either side of the right-of-way of a railroad. Now, the railroad's range of activity is five to six times greater. True, these new transportation agencies present some problems that embarrass at times, but better transportation in whatever form it may be, operates to the general good.

The railroads do ask for reciprocal regulation.

Michigan is in the vanguard as an industrial state. Let us retain that position.

The Michigan Railroad Association approves the state's proposed program for more good roads because it will yield a large return on the investment.

MORTGAGE SALE

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed by Fred Skelton and Ellie Skelton, of the Township of Chandler, Charlevoix County, Michigan, unto the Union Trust & Savings Bank of Flint, Michigan, a Michigan banking corporation, dated the 23rd day of October, 1911, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Charlevoix County, Michigan, on the 24th day of October, A. D. 1911, in Liber 47 of Mortgages on page 389, on which mortgage there is now claimed to be due the sum of two hundred ninety and 59-100 ($290.59) dollars, including interest computed to the date thereof, and also an attorney fee of fifteen ($15.00) dollars provided by statute, and no suit or proceeding at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on Friday, the 14th day of May, A. D. 1926, at one o'clock in the afternoon (Eastern standard time), we shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Charlevoix, Michigan, that being the place where the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is held, the premises described in said mortgage or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage with seven per cent interest and all legal costs, together with an attorney fee of fifteen ($15.00) dollars provided by statute, the premises described in said mortgage as the following described premises, situated in the Township of Chandler, County of Charlevoix and State of Michigan, viz: The northeast quarter (¼) of the southeast quarter (¼) of section thirty-four (34), township thirty-three (33) north, range four (4) west.

required for lockage. Maj. Rufus W. Putnam, district engineer at Chicago, says this estimate is far too low. He has made a recent study of the subject and has sent his findings into the congress. Until congress releases them he is reluctant to discuss them. He admits, however, that the amount is between 3,500 c. f. s. and 7,000 c. f s. That is within the range of the authorized 4,167 and the possible 7,500 c. f. s. It is far below the desired 10,000 c. f. s.

To Reduce Construction Cost.

This leaves only one possible need on which to base the demand upon congress for 10,000 c. f. s. for navigation purposes in the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway—the need of holding the cost of construction within reasonable limits.

As regards the Illinois State waterway link the present eight-foot project is going ahead on an estimated cost of around $20,000,000. But Illinois now wants a nine-foot depth, and Chief Engineer M. G. Barnes figures that with 10,000 c. f. s diversion this can be secured with additional excavation costing only $319,500. With 6,800 c. f. s. diversion the extra cost would be $788,000. With 4,167 c. f. s. diversion it would be $1,231,500. The difference between the estimate at 10,000 c. f. s. and that at 6,800 c. f. s. —$466,500—is about how much more it would cost Illinois to build a nine-foot waterway if congress refused the 10,000 c. f. s. assuming that the amount of diversion ultimately allowed will be a compromise between the present 4,167 and the desired 10,000 c. f. s.

Recommend Eight-Foot Channel

The cost of Uncle Sam's part of the Lakes-to-Gulf project—nine-foot channel, 200 feet wide from Utica to Cario—would be $3,057,700, with maintenance of $735,550, according to estimates submitted five years ago by a board of government engineers. These are based on a "probable minimum increment of 7,500 c. f. s."

They include Illinois river initial work, $1,987,700, maintenance $77,550; Mississippi, initial work $1,070,000, maintenance $659,000.

With 10,000 c. f. s. it is figured the nine-foot channel in the Illinois river would cost $665,000 less.

This board, headed by Gen. H. Taylor, figured that an eight-foot channel would cost only $1,930,000, as it would be necessary to build it only from Utica to St. Louis, as there already is an eight-foot channel from St. Louis to Cairo.

The board recommended an eight-foot project all the way through from Utica to Cario, largely because of the difficulty of maintaining a nine-foot channel in the Mississippi. It said:

"If the eight-foot depth proves successful and an increase to nine feet is later deemed advisable this can be obtained by simply adding to the dredging plant engaged in maintenance operations."

Later on this board was rapped over the knuckles for using 7,500 c. f. s. as a basis for its calculations instead of the authorized 4,167 c. f. s. and it presented new estimates and recommendations.

With 4,167 diversion it estimated the cost of an eight-foot channel from Utica to St. Louis at $2,395,800 and $648,500 maintenance. For a nine-foot channel from Utica to Cairo the cost is figured at $6,191,100 and $650,000 for maintenance. The board judged the cost of the nine-foot improvement with 4,167 diversion to be prohibited and the cost of the eight-foot improvement to be out of proportion to the commerce that might be expected.

With 4,167 c. f. s. the board recommended a seven-foot channel which would cost $736,000 and $47,000 annual maintenance.

These reports of the engineers indicate that a greater diversion than 4,167 c. f. s. is necessary to keep the cost of an eight or nine-foot channel within reason. But it does not indicate that the need runs to 10,000 c. f. s.

That 10,000 c. f. s. Claim

The present claim that 10,000 c. f. s. is necessary for navigation is doubtless founded upon the recommendation made by Col. W. V. Judson, division engineer, in the original report upon which the eight-foot findings of the federal engineering board were based.

He says:

"In my opinion, to most reasonably conform to the probable conditions of the future, an eight-foot project should now be adopted (in the Illinois river) based on a 7,500 second feet withdrawal for purposes of estimate and with all dams removed. Then should congress place the limit of the amount of water to be withdrawn from Lake Michigan at 10,000 c. f. s. second feet, which I deem probable and, under proper conditions advisable, that increment would of itself increase the depth to nine feet. The computations show that with all dams removed, an increment of 10,000 second feet will increase the depths due to the increment of 7,500 second feet by about 1.25 feet at Utica, about one foot at Peoria and Havana, and slightly less at the mouth."

The Illinois State waterway is now being built along the lines of this recommendation. It is an eight-foot project as it stands, but it is hoped to get a nine-foot depth by securing the full 10,000 c. f. s. diversion.

Would Float Barges

An eight-foot channel would accommodate modern barge fleets such as those operated by the Mississippi-Warrior service. These boats have a draft of 7½ feet. Occasionally they have troubles because of lack of depth in the Mississippi between St. Louis and points down as far as Memphis. But such conditions always have been chronic in the erratic Mississippi, and, perhaps, always will be chronic. They are met with commonly only in the low water stages from late July to December.

An eight-foot channel wouldn't be as fine as a nine-foot channel, but would serve to demonstrate the possibilities of transportation development on the lakes-to-gulf waterway. Later the nine-foot channel, if needed, could be provided, in one of two ways, as congress, guided by then existing conditions, might decide—either dredging or more water from Lake Michigan.

But as things stand now, immediate authorization of 10,000 cubic feet for "navigation purposes" in the lakes-to-gulf waterway would seem, to say the least, premature, if not far-fetched.

OH, MY BACK!

Aching Backs Make Life Miserable For Many Charlevoix People.

It isn't right to suffer day in and day out with dull, unceasing backache, Or be utterly miserable with sharp stabs of pain whenever you stoop or lift. But chances are you will suffer these tormenting aches and pains as long as your weakened kidneys are neglected. You may have headaches, too, spells of dizziness and urinary disorders. Then use Doan's Pills—a stimulent diuretic to the kidneys. Experiences of Charlevoix people prove the merit of Doan's.

W. H. Guild, prop. "Fixit shop," 109 Antrim St., Charlevoix, says: "I had an attack of backache and kidney trouble and was so bad, I had to stop work entirely. Sharp, stabbing pains darted across my kidneys when I turned quickly. Finally I got so I could hardly get out of my chair. My kidneys acted irregularly, too. Nothing seemed to give me any relief until I used Doan's Pills. One box cured me."

ANOTHER SLASH IN FORD CAR PRICES

Greatest Reduction in Price of Fordor Sedap

A new price list for Ford passenger cars, including a material reduction in the prices of closed cars, has been announced by Edsel B. Ford, president of the Ford Motor Company. The new prices became effective Thursday morning, February 11.

The biggest reduction is made in the price of the For-dor Sedan which is dropped from $660 to $565, a reduction of $95.

A reduction of $60 also is made in the Tudor Sedan which is cut from $580 to $520 and the price of the Coupe is reduced from $520 to $500.

In the open type cars the price of the Touring Car goes from $290 to $310 and the Runabout from $260 to $290.

All prices are f. o. b. Detroit.

"Demand for closed cars since the improved type in colors were introduced has been constantly increasing," said a statement accompanying the announcement. "With greater output of these types costs have lessened and it is the policy of the company to give its customers the benefit of all reductions in production costs. A slight increase is made in the price of open cars."

There will be no change in the price of the Model T. chassis, the Ford ton truck chassis or the Fordson Tractor, it was stated.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS

By B. C. Mellencamp

Sweet clover is the most profitable pasture for cows, according to J. G. Wells, extension specialist in dairying, who spoke at three dairy feeding meetings conducted by County Agent Mellencamp, at Charlevoix, East Jordan and Boyne City.

It stands the most grief of any pasture, grows the most rapidly and furnishes the most feed per acre. In addition, it is easy to get a stand and due to it being only a two year crop, work in well with a crop rotation. As a result, it is superior to alfalfa, which is more easily trampled and killed and does not produce as much growth.

The average cow is under fed in the period just before grass pasture in the spring and again during August, September and October, after the June grass and pasture of a similar nature dries up and before the cow is fed a winter ration. To have plenty of good palatable feed at those two periods, should be the aim of the dairyman hoping to make money. Sweet clover is just the crop for the above named conditions, as it can be seeded with oats in the spring and then be utilized for pasture after the oats are taken off for a period of two months or so, immediately after the June grass dries and before the cows are fed their winter ration, the only things to watch out for is to leave around a six inch growth in order to hold a snow covering for protection in the winter time. Then the clover pasture comes on as soon as grass in the spring and can be pastured straight through to the end of the crop, or the cattle can be taken from the field at seeding time and the crop will reseed itself. If short on hay, one cutting of hay can be secured and still get quite a large amount of pasture. Then again the cows can be left on the pasture all summer and the remains can be plowed under for a green manuring crop, which is a wonderful soil-builder. It is doubtful if any other crop can be used for as many purposes as sweet clover and at the end of the crop, leave the soil in as good, if not better condition, than when first sowed. Why not use sweet clover in this way?

Mr. Wells stated that the average cow produces only 160 pounds of butterfat in a year, which means only around $30.00 net profit, while the average cow in the cow-testing association produce 293 pounds of butterfat, which means approximately $70.00 net profit. There are two ways of making more money out of cows, one is to increase the quality of the product, the other to increase production. Figures from 18,000 cows in cow-test Assn. show that the greater the production, the greater the profits. A 100 pound fat cow, only makes $11.00 net profit, while a 200 pound cow makes $42.00, a 300 pound cow makes $73.00 and a 400 pound cow returns $106.00. It can be readily noted that as the production is doubled the returns are nearly four times and as the production is trebled, the profits are nearly seven times greater. Therefore, why not sell the poor cows for meat and feed the better cows better and reap higher returns?

The importance of the right amount of minerals in the rations, was also emphasized.

As a result of conducting a mineral feeding experiment at M. S. C. it has been found that the average cow is in need of calcium and phosphorus, in addition to what is received from the regular hay and grain feeds. Steamed bone meal is the best agency to supply these needs, as it contains both of the necessary elements and is not injurious. The easiest way is to add two pounds bone meal to every 100 pounds of grain mixture and this will insure more milk and a healthier cow.

Many commercial mineral mixes are sold on the market to take care of the cow's needs, but the experiment being conducted, thus far shows that instead of being of benefit, they have proven injurious for the five cows fed this ration, gave less milk and none of the calves lived longer than twelve days after birth. While this experiment has not been run long enough to be absolutely accurate, the results are in conformance with the opinion of our most noted dairy authorities.

Space does not permit a discussion of all the other valuable suggestions given the dairymen by Mr. Wells, but anyone missing these meetings lost a fine opportunity to increase the effeciency of their feeding program.

FARM MARKETS BY RADIO DAILY

By Courtesy of Dodge Bros., Through WGHP.

A program of farm news and complete market reports is now available to Michigan farmers and others interested, every evening at seven o'clock, Eastern standard time, over station WGHP, through the courtesy of Dodge Brothers, Inc., and The Michigan Business Farmer.

"This powerful broadcasting station at Detroit, is owned and operated by George Harrison Phelps, Inc., and with 1500 watts capacity it can be easily picked up by receiving sets in all parts of Michigan.

"The farm program opens with the news of the day, particularly as it applies to agriculture and business farming. This is followed by a complete summary of Detroit, Chicago and Buffalo, live stock and grain quotations, seed, fruit, butter and egg prices. Then the day's weather report and prediction, together with Pritchard's weather forecast for the two ensuing weeks. Important farm meetings and sale dates are also given when available.

"Coming as it does at supper time when the farm family are gathered in the home, this farm hour over station WGHP has met with an enthusiastic reception by farmers in Michigan.

"Station WGHP operates on a wave length of 270 meters and the farm program goes on the air promptly every evening, except Saturday and Sunday, at seven o'clock Eastern standard time, which is six o'clock central time."

LOCAL FIRM SUFFERS HEAVY LOSS

Robbers Carry Away Varied Assortment of Loot.

Sometime during the night last Sunday, someone entered George Lusk's store on Bridge street and relieved him of about forty dollars worth of merchandise. and about $2.50 in pennies, the contents of the till.

Entrance to the store was gained by cutting away the putty and removing a pane in a window in the wood shed and breaking in the back door. The door was evidently kicked in as the bolt lock was broken out, screws and all. Goods to the extent of about $40 were taken, the loot including two pair of pants, four shirts, five or six pair of gloves, six or seven pairs of socks, four cartons of cigarettes, about ten pounds of candy and a box of chewing gum.

The robbers made their exit through one of the rear windows, and from the character of the goods stolen, one is led to believe that it was the workof boys. The sheriff and chief of police are working on the case and believe they know who committed the robbery.

SPLENDID PROGRAM ON OPENING NIGHT

One Hundred Fifty Members, Wives and Friends Present.

One hundred and fifty members and their wives and friends attended the opening of the new Pythian castle hall last Thursday evening, February 11th.

Saxophone solo, W. C. Bellinger.

Short history of Pine Lake Lodge No. 122, W. E. Hampton, Grand Keeper of Records and Seal.

Cornet solo, A. J. Winnick.

Remarks by Wm. C. Wetmore, Grand Chancellor.

Music by orchestra.

Lesson of Friendship, Grand Lodge officers.

At the close of the program a luncheon was served, the remainder of the evening being spent in dancing and cards.

Special Valentine telegrams were used in issuing the invitations, many acceptances being acknowledged in a like manner. The scheme was original and quite out of the ordinary. Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Wood won the honors at bridge which was followed by a dainty luncheon.

REV. PHILLIP HOWE WINS PHONOGRAPH

Winning Number, 1272, Showed Up Tuesday Afternoon.

An interested crowd gathered at the Charlevoix Hardware Co.'s store last Saturday evening at 8 o'clock, to witness the drawing for the phonograph which was given away by that firm.

Six numbers were drawn without revealing the winner, although many ticket holders were in the audience. However, the lucky number, 1272, held by Rev. J. W. Howe of Route 3, who took home the prize, showed up Tuesday.

Considerable interest was attrncted by the stunt, which proved to be an excellent drawing card.

WILL PAY REWARD MONEY

TENTATIVE AGREEMENT TO THIS EFFECT REACHED

Michigan Motorists Not to Be Subjected to An Increase in Gas or Weight Tax

(By Ed. A. Nowack)

Michigan motorists need have no fear of an increased gas or weight tax or modification of either. Townships and counties will receive their delinquent reward money on definite dates and early enough each year so the money will be available for use with the beginning of the season. Not a cent of reward money is to be repudiated. The future highway program as visioned by the special session of the 53rd Michigan legislature sees a road building program of about 300 miles of improved roads annually.

That, in effect, is the program tentatively agreed to by house and senate leaders and Gov. Alex Groesbeck and which is on its way to enactment this week in the shape of a bill introduced by Rep. Eugene Kirby of Covert and Rep. John Gillett of Kalakaska.

Solution of the highway problem was started when Rep. Gillett introduced a bill asking amendments to the highway law to provide payment of $250,000 delinquent reward money for townships. This was followed by the Kirby bill which incorporated the Gillett amendment following a conference between Gov. Groesbeck, Kirby and Gillett. The Kirby-Gillett bill provides this schedule of payment for delinquent county rewards:

Townships to receive $250,000 by April 1, 1926, which was not previously provided for and which is all that is owing them at this time, and to receive thereafter on that date each year all township reward money that falls due.

One million dollars county reward money to be paid June 1, 1926. One million dollars each on February 1 and April 1, 1927 and two millions annually thereafter on those dates until all present delinquent rewards are paid as well as all reward money now on application, filed and approved previous to the repeal of the reward law in April, 1925. This reward money totals over nine millions.

In accepting this schedule the legislature approves the temporary suspension of about one and one-half millions in rewards for one year but makes immediate payment of township rewards for which no previous provision existed. Townships in 18 counties will be affected.

How Money is Obtained

The proposed schedule will be met out of the naturul increases in the gas and weight tax by reuson of the increuse in motor vehieles and use.

Highway Commissioner Frank Rogers, at the request of numerous legislators, submitted a seven-page letter to the assembly detailing highway approprintions, work, expenditures and costs of mooted seetions of roads. In part the letter says:

The 1923 legislnture appropriated, for the fiscal years 1924-25 the respective sums of $321,440 and $331,190 for administrative expenses. Departmental operating expenses were so decreased that an unexpended balance of $105,214 remained at the end of the 1925 fiscal year which was returned to the state treasury.

The average cost of more than three million cubic yards of earth work on authorized 1925 projects was 49.7 cents per cubic yard as compared to 62 cents per cubic yard for 1924.

Last season's trunk line and federal aid road work included over two million square yards of concrete pavement, most of this being the seven-nine inch standard pavement 20 feet wide at an average price, including cement, of $2.17 per square yard as compared to the 1924 price of $2.23 per square yard.

For the period covered by the letter it is stated a total of federal aid funds of $14,303,154 were received up to February 17, 1926 while $1,892,875 is covered by present outstanding contracts. Additional federal aid of $4,146,335 is available next July 1.

VOTE FOR YOUR CHOICE MONDAY

PRIMARY ELECTION A MIX-UP AFFAIR

Failure of Candidates to File Within Proper Time Limit Causes Blank Ballots for Voters

Monday, Murch 1, is city primary election duy. This election occurres every year. We are supposed to make our choice of men who signified their intentions as candidates for various city offices by filing their petitions. A full city ticket is to be voted on, together with ward offices. But here is the hitch.

The 1925 legislature changed the date for liling petitions. They advanced it a wek or so. This change in the law did not become generally known until after the date for filing petitions had pussed. Consequently, on one could legally file—so no one did file.

Result: When you enter the polls next Mondny to vote, and ask for your party ticket, you will be given a ticket, printed in the usual form, upon which no names appear. No one filed so no names of candidates appear on the tickets. A beuutiful mess, but we have been in messes before and can survive this one.

Here is what you must do if you vote: Ask for your party ticket, take your peneil or pen and write the names of the candidate of your choice for the offiees designated on the ballot. Be sure and spell their names right and also be certnin of their names before you entor the booth. If you want to vote for our present mayor, don't write his name as "Art"; write it Arthur Bergeon. Do the sama with the name of every candidate you wish to vote for. When he qualifies for offiee, he must do so under the same name he is registered under. His name is Arthur Bergeon. He cannot qualify under the name of "Art," "Artie" or any other name other than the one used in registering. Do this with the name of every person you vote for, regardless of office.

Candidates for the various city offices who have signified their intentions as such are as follows:

City Ticket

Mayor, Arthur Bergeon.
City Clerk, Charles H. Lamphear.
City Treasurer, Elmn H. Cook.

First Ward

Supervisor, Hurry A. Craig.
Alderman, Robert Bridge.

Second Ward

Supervisor, Simon M. Rose.
Alderman, Robert J. Madill.

Third Ward

Supervisor, Archie Alcock.
Alderman, William E. Parmelee.

These are the men who have looked after the affairs of the city during the past year. They are all up for re-electlon nnd are deserving of further recognition from our citizens. They have successfully kept the city in a position of low taxes and low bonded indebtedness, whilo

WESTERN MICH. TENNIS EVENT

SCHEDULED HERE SOME TIME DURING MONTH OF AUGUST

Western Michigan Championships Secood in Importance to State Meet Awarded Grand Rapids

Tennis has been steadily gaining in popularity practieally the world over for 35 years. Here in Charlevoix the game has always held its own and now is one of the favored outdoor sports, each season sharing honors with golf, baseball and yachting.

Followers of the game will be very glad to hear that this city has been awarded the Western Michigan championship, second in importance only to the state meet, which was awarded to our loyal friends at Grand Rapids. The award to Charlevoix came unsolicited and is a testimonial to the great success of our sanctioned tournament held last year.

Hurold A. Cartier, who did so much to make last year's event a success, attended the meeting at Grand Rapids and writes with enthusiasm of the probability of securing several stnrs of national prominence. However, until dates have been decided by the Western Board meeting in Chicago next month little can be done in this respect. Charlevoix is usking for the week of August 2nd or 9th.

The local organization is very fortunate in the addition of two new clay courts to augment the three found somewhat inadequate last year. This will undoubtedly swell the entry list, as a battery of five courts appeals strongly to the seasoned tournament player as well as the beginner—it means that there will be plenty of action from the start, that "the weeding out process" will not be unduly prolonged.

A. L. Livingston hns nlready advised manager A. I. Creamer of The Inn of the city's good fortune in securing the West Michigan meet. Mr. Creamer is one of the chief sponsors for the game in Charlevoix and it is always safe to count on his generosity and support.

W. G. Parker, local veteran, is rounding up new members and has secured Miss Lillis Flanders to nssist in handling the women's events. Miss Flanders plays a nice game and will improve with more practice. She expects to interest a numher of the Normal girls.

As older players drop out the ranks are recruited from the schools. It would be a fine move if the board of eduction could see its way clear to build two good cement courts where the dirt courts are now. The lines, painted white, would need no attention, nnd the courts would be greatly enjoyed by the students, reverting to the use of all during vacations. They could be used for tournament matches during inclement weather.

W. H. Miler reports for the Belvedere interest that tho courts there will be in splendid shape this season. A new clay will ba spread over the entire battery of six courts.

All of the nbove will be gratifying to Charlevoix residents, business and professional men generally, who, so generously supported the tournament last year. Tennis interests here are active and united on a friendly basis. The city is pleased with the outlook.

WHAT IS THIS GULF WATERWAY

ILLINOIS PLAN OF BIG CONERN TO ALL MICHIGAN

No. 8

(By Arthur W. Stace.)

Ten thousand cubic feet of water rushing out the great lakes and down the Mississippi valley every second of the day and night year in and yenr out—what is that worth in power to the interests along its course?

It is worth a million dollars or more a year to the Chicago Sanitary district.

It will be worth at least a million and a half to the state of Illinois.

It is worth the value of 10,000 horsepower to private owners and lessees of waterpower rights at Marseilles, Ill.

All Power Near Chicago

All the water power that will be available on the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway is within 96 miles of the mouth of Chicago river. In this stretch there is a drop of 139 feet from the normal level of Lake Michigan. This drop, though divided into five stages, gives opportunity for the development of enormous waterpower.

Below Utica, the end of the Illinois State waterway, the Illinois river is a sluggish stream with a drop of only 34 feet in some 230 miles. The slope is so gradual there is no opportunity to produce power.

As for the Mississippi, while it has a considerable slope it is so untractable there never has been any attempt to harness it below the mouth of the Illinois.

Every bit of power that will be or can be developed, is located within the two stretches of the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway controlled by the Chicago Snnitury district and the state of Illinois.

Sanitary District "Gets Its."

The Sanitary district gets its million dollars worth of power from the first big tumble the Lake Michigan water takes on its way to the southern seas. This is at Lockport where the drainage canal discharges its load of diluted sewage into the Des Plaines river.

Here in a modern power house, seven great turbines of 6,000 horsepower each, transform the energy of the river of pollution into electricity that turns Chicago's front yard into an entrancing fairyland, more beautiful by far than New York's vaunted Grent White Way. The filth-born current lights the boulevards, the parks, und the streets of the sanitary district, and furnishes power for the district's own plants.

The Lockport power house has a capacity of 21,000 kilowatts per hour, but in practice it runs below that. When it was taking water high, wide, and handsome it was producing a weekday capacity of 15,200 kilowatts per hour. That was awhile back when the drainage canal was bringing down around 10,000 cubic feet per second from Lake Michigan with some 1,200 c. f. s. of sewage solids mixed in with it.

Following the adverse decision of the supreme court, the 10,000 c. f. s. diversion was cut to the allowed 8,500. And now Lake Michigan, like a patient bossy who has been overmilked, hns rebelled, and refuses to let down more than 7,200 cubic feet per second. This is because the lake level has fallen so low that more water cannot be taken into the canal at the existing depths.

This fact may be news to a lot of the sanitary district folk themselves. It was discovered this fall by federal engineers who made a check of the canal flow.

The availnble head of water is supposed to be 34 feet, but actually it is usually below 31 feet, depending upon the levels in the canal and in the tnil race. There is a difference of from five to nine feet in the level of Lake Michigan and the level of the water at the power house.

Million Dollars Worth

Definite figures are not available as to the value of the electricity produced. The million-dollar estimate is figured upon the basis of 15,200 kilowatts per hour production sold at the most favorable rate given by the Consumer Power Co. in Michigan to its largest day and night customers. The value may actually he larger. The production may be less than 15,300 k. w's. But a million is not so far out of the way. And it all comes from Lake Michigan or from a drainage area that naturally belongs to Lake Michigan.

Purchases Suburban Home

The fulfillment of a desire to own a suburhan home cume to a climax last week when Mrs. Joe Foster of this city purchases what is known as the Boulder Farm, lying about a qunrter of n mile north of the Charlevoix-Petoskey road at the Waller Farm turn. The farm was owned and operated for years by the late Murtha Wilson, later being bought hy Fred Moline, who in turn sold to Mrs. Foster, who will tnke possession April 1st.

The St. Mary's Altar Society will give a St. Patrick's Day supper at the Charlevoix Hotel, Wednesday evening, Mareh 17. The publie is cordially invited.—Adv. 8t3.

Balloon trousers are now in general use but the high attitude record is held by skirts.

ASSOCIATION OF COMMERCE PLAN FOR BIG EVENT

Working Committees for Coming Year Named by President Cartier —Active Season in Sight

The Charlevoix Association of Commerce met in the council chambers Wednesday evening last at a regular meeting with nn attendance of about forty. Committee reports showed favorable progress was being made in their respective work, particularly those on roads, fish and game and tennis.

W. G. Parker, chairman of the tennis committee, reported securing the Western Michigan Championship meet for Charlevoix, to be held August 9th. Fuller details regarding this meet will be found in another article in this issue.

A special committee composed of Capt. Geo. W. Weaver, Larry Chase and A. Russell was appointed to confer with transporation companies, hotels and boarding houses in an effort to secure rates for combination vacation tickets and rates, with side trips similar to those issued for cities in Florida and Colorado. This move may result in bringing many short term vacationists to Charlevoix.

A special committee, R. F. Sloan, Oluf Nordrum and Dr. W. W. Mitchell were appointed to outline and submit for approval, new by-laws for the association, both committees to report at the next regular or speeial meeting.

After considerable discussion, the entertainment committee was instructed to secure a good speaker and hold a banquet on the next regular meeting night.

Membership: M. A. Levinson, A. Powers, Benj. Brown, Henry Partridge, Charles Carey, H. A. Craig, Robert Bridge.

PUBLISH ITEMIZED ACCOUNT OF EXPENDITURES

This year and each succeeding year until the present law is changed, every township in the State of Michigan must publish in some newspaper or newspapers published in the county, an itemized statement of all receipts and disbursements for the ensuing year, this statement to be prepared and published before the April election.

In past years it was optional. This year it is compulsory. Tax puyers have been insistent in knowing where and how their tax money has been spent. In previous years many township officials prepared no statement at all, while others prepared a make-shift report that did not meet the requirements. This year a complete itemized account MUST be prepared and published. Township officers should become thoroughly familiar with this ruling and prepare their statements in a lawful manner.

BARNARD

Continued cold and frosty.

Miss Clara Dougherty spent the week end of last week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson of the Ellsworth telephone office.

The young people enjoyed a sleigh ride party on Friday evening, February 12th. After driving to Charlevoix they spent the evening sliding on Bridge street hill. We are sorry they haven't any hills nearer home.

A very interesting Grange meeting was held on Friday evening. One new member was admitted, a short program was given, a discussion of plans for the addition to the hall took place, and, not least by any means, a good lunch was served at about midnight.

A jolly bunch of young married folks spent the evening of February 12th at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Shapton. The time was spent in listening to the radio, playing progressive pedro, and eating a bountiful lunch. Of course everyone had a most enjoyable time.

Anna Gornell was surprised last Saturday evening when a party of about twenty-five young people dropped in to help her celebrate her birthday. Needless to tell of the good time they had. Lunch was served at midnight, after which they all departed wishing Anna many more happy birthdays.

Avoid Poorly Balanced Breakfasts

That's Where the Great Dietary Mistake is made

IF YOU feel tired, hungry, "fidgety" hours before lunch, don't jump to the conclusion of poor health. Thousands have energetic mornings because they start the day with wrong breakfasts.

To feel right, you must have a well-balanced, complete breakfast ration. At most other meals—lunch and dinner—you get it. But breakfast is a hurried meal, often badly chosen.

Thus Quaker Oats; containing 16% protein, food's great tissue builder, 58% carbohydrate-its great energy element, plus all-important vitamines and the "bulk" that makes laxatives seldom needed, is the dietetic urge of the world today.

It is food that "stands by" you through the morning. Quick Quaker cooks in 3 to 5 minutes. That's faster than plain toast. Don't deny yourself the natural stimulation this rich food offers you.

Buck Jones Impromptu Scene With Raucous Ram

Buck Jones, who is starred by William Fox in "The Desert's Price," a thrilling Western written by William MacLeod Raine, at the Palace Theatre, Saturday and Sunday, February 27-28, has had some gripping experiences in his colorful career, but he was confronted by something entirely new when filming his latest release.

"I've been called upon to do virtually everything a human can be expected to do," said Jones, discussing this new adventure, "but my director certainly gave me a jolt when he informed me I'd have to do a chase with a ram in "The Desert's Price."

"The King on Main Street"

Adolphe Menjou, as the galavanting young king of a small European country in Paramount's "The King on Main Street," which will be the feature in the Palace Theatre on Wednesday, March 3, because he is of a philandering disposition, finds that frequent trips to Paris in search of romance are necessary. There he becomes known as "the great lover of Europe."

NEWS FROM ELLSWORTH AND VICINITY

ELLSWORTH

August VanderArk had the misfortune of loosing the end of the his best feeling horses Sunday afternoon and was severely trampled. He feels much letter at this writing.

A fish supper was given by the Ellsworth Board of Trade, Monday evening, in honor of their wives and friends. Every one had a very good time and they departed for their homes at 10:00 o'clock. Thanks to the newly organized orchestra and speakers.

ANTRIM CITY

Capt. Brant is getting along fine after his operation.

Mr. and Mrs. Baumbach went to East Jordan, Friday.

Mr. Brooks made a business trip to Charlevoix, Thursday.

C. L. Stott and family, called at the Frank Mason home Sunday.

Peris VanDerStreek called at the Rollie Baumbach home Wednesday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Mason were visitors at the Stott home Saturday evening.

The mail man on Route 1, Central Lake, had a runaway Thursday. No damage done.

C. L. Stott returned home from Gaylord, Monday, last, by way of Boyne City and Charlevoix.

Mrs. Baker and son, Nelson, of Eastport, spent the week end with her son, Clyde and family of Antrim City.

A correction—Lester Brooks did not sprain his ankle in capturing the fox. He hurt his foot when he jumped out to help Lizzie through a sonw drift. He thought she wus going to get stalled.

The young men of Antrim City, have organized into a club. We do not know whether they call it a baseball club, a war club, or an Indian club, but we call it the girl shy club, as we cannot find a beter name. If a young lady calls on Ma, why Pa has to see her home or she has to go alone, as the young man is too shy. But if an old gentleman cals, the young man will take him home with the car. Not so, when I was young.

ROCK ELM

Mrs. Smatts visited one day last week at the Secord home.

Mrs. Wilbur Spidle returned home from Grand Rapids last week.

James Secord sold the lake frontage from his farm to a Detroit firm recently.

Mrs. Joseph Whitfield left Friday to visit relatives and friends in Detroit, Jackson and other points in Michigan.

Wilbur Spidle has purchased some thoroughbred sheep recently and hopes to soon have a fine flock of Shropshires.

Miss Jessie Metz visited a few days last week at the homes of Mrs. Joseph Kenny and Mrs. Boyd Hipp of East Jordan.

ATWOOD

Mr. and Mrs. Van Schaardenburg of Charlevoix, were the guests of her sister, Mrs. Lester Harwood last week.

Miss Mildred Haan left for Muskegon on Thursday of this week. She is undecided how long she may stay—we think about 30 days.

Mrs. Earl Farrel is in Muskegon.

L. O. Iseman of Ellsworth, took Rev. C. M. Conkling around his circuit Sunday with his snowmobile.

Mrs. Ethan Jolliffe, who has been visiting her daughter, Mrs. Chas. Edson, for several days, returned home on Saturday last from Ellsworth.

Supremacy Maintained through Features which Established Ford Leadership

Left-Hand Drive—
Originally introduced by Henry Ford on the Model T car in 1908 and since adopted for most American-made cars.

Three Point Motor Suspension—
First used by Henry Ford in 1903, and a feature of the Model T powerplant for eighteen years.

Dual Ignition System—
Dual ignition is provided for Ford cars, (1) the Ford magneto and (2) the generator and storage battery. This has been a great factor in establishing the Ford reputation for reliability.

Planetary Transmission—
Costs more to build than the conventional sliding gear type but gives better light car control.

Multiple Disc-in-oil Clutch—
The multiple disc clutch is generally conceded to be the best and smoothest type for any car. The Ford clutch runs in oil.

Thermo-Syphon Cooling System—
Extremely simple—always efficient. No water puump to require packing. Circulation of water is governed entirely by engine temperature.

Simple, Dependable Lubrication—
Exceedingly simple, combining the splash principle with gravity flow. No pump required.

Torque Tube Drive—
Henry Ford originated the Torque Tube in 1908—a driving principle now embodied in many of the highest priced cars.

"We have never lowered the quality of the car to reduce the price"

I swung around to scrutinize the owner of the voice and saw a handsome, open-faced man in the prime of life, big and strong of his body, but with only one leg. The other, the left, had been lopped off high up near the hip, and he supported himself upon a long crutch of very fine-carved hardwood — mahogany, I afterward discovered. This crutch he employed with all the dexterity of his missing limb.

While I looked at him and he was first speaking he hopped up beside me with a confidential air that was very flattering to a young man and impressed Darby even more.

"Are you from the brig yonder?" I asked curiously.

"Aye, aye, young gentleman, I am; and one of the miserable sinners as was saved by an inscrutable Providence as takes no account o' men's deserts, just or unjust, as the preachers' sayin' is. Out of Barbadoes, I am, in the brig Constant. Name o' Silver, sir—John, says my sponsors in baptism.

"But my mates most generally calls me 'Barbecue' 'count o' my being held a monstrous fine cook. And there's a tale to that, young sir. Ah, yes! This weren't the first time I suffered at the hands o' them pirates that scourge and ravage the seas to the despite of poor, honest sailormen."

"Was it off Sandy hook?" I inquired.

"Off Sandy hook?" he repeated. "Mayhe 'twas so, gentleman. We took small reckoning o' where we were. Our one thought was to make port whole and safe."

"But I see they hailed you?" I pressed him.

"Thim?" he answered. "Oh, yes; but— May I make bold to ask, sir, ha' other vessels been chased off New York port, do you know?"

"That Bristol packet ran the notorious Captain Rip-Rap tops'ls down but yester morning," I told him.

His brows knit together in a frown, apparently of thought.

"Captain Rip-Rap you says it was! Blister me, young gentleman, but that's dreadful news. Well, well, well! A fortunate escape as ever was. And 'tis good hearing that others was ekal lucky. But I dare say the king's ships will be after him by now?"

"No, there's none nearer than Boston," I answered. "'Twill be a week at the least before we can hunt the scoundrels hence."

He wagged his head dolefully.

"Blister me, but that's ill news. Fortunate, indeed, I was to draw clear."

One of the wherrymen was sculling toward us along the shore, and I waved to him to pull under the piling on which we stood.

"I must be off," I said. "I congratulate you, Master Silver, on your escape."

He bobbed his head and pulled at his forelock.

"Thank'ee kindly, young gentleman. Here, sir, let me catch the painter. Right! Will ye ha' the basket on the thwart by ye? And this nice lad here, doesn't he go, too? No?

"Maybe then ye'd add a mite to your kindness and let me berry his time for a half-gluss or so for to show me a couple o' landmarks I must make in the town. I wouldn't ask it of ye, sir, only as ye see, I'm half-crippled in a manner o' speakin', and this is a strange port to me, as plies usual to the West Indies."

"Use the lad by all means," I answered. "Darby, take Master Silver wherever he wishes to go."

Darby's freckled face gleamed at the prospect of more of the company of this one-legged sailorman who talked so easily of pirate fights and flights.

"Oh, aye, Master Robert," says he. "I'll help him all I know."

My wherryman was on the point of laying to his oars when a sudden thought caused me to check him.

"By the way, Master Silver," I called, "it occurs to me that perhaps Darby may be unable to serve you in all that you wish. Do you seek anyone in especial?"

He hesitated for just the fraction of a minute.

"Why, not especially in particular, sir," he answered at last. "I am for the Whale's Head tavern, if ye happen to know o' such a place."

I nodded.

He shouted renewed thanks and stumped off ugilely on his crutch, Darby strutting beside him with a comical pride.

Aboard the Anne I found all in confusion. Captain Farraday had not returned since he landed the preceding afternoon and undoubtedly was sleeping off in the George tavern. The mate had gone ashore that morning to search for him, and would probably take advantage of the opportunity to emulate his skipper's example. Master Jenkins, who had missed drowning at the red hands of the redoubtable Rip-Rap and Flint, was in charge of the ship. He was a melancholy, sour-visaged East-countryman, who moved with a deliberation as pronounced as Peter Corlaer's, and inspecting the manifests with him was a tedious business. The afternoon was gone when we concluded our work, agreed upon the time of arrival of the lighters on the morrow and returned to the deck.

My wherry had been dismissed long ago, and he-lade the bosun muster a crew to row me ashore.

As my boat straightened away from the Bristol packet's side a large sloop around the bull of the Spaniard and pulled after us, a dozen brawny fellows tugging at the oars. A single cloaked figure sat in the stern sheets beside the officer in command. The two boats made the Broad street slip almost together, and I leaped ashore, tossed several coins to the sailors who had rowed me and started to walk off, bent upon reporting to my father, who, I knew, would be provoked by the length of time my errand had consumed. But I had not walked far when a man called after me from the wharf head.

"Senor! Sirr-rr-rah!"

I turned to face the coxswain of the frigate's barge and a farrago of Spanish gibberish of which I understood not a word. And upon my saying as much a second person stepped forward into the yellow glow of an oil lanthorn which hung from a bracket upon a warehouse wall hard by. 'Twas the cloaked figure of the barge, and instead of a midshipman or underofficer the scanty light revealed a young woman whose lissome grace was vibrant through the cumbersome folds of her wrap. A single ejaculation of sibilant Spanish, and the coxswain was hushed.

"Sir," said she in English as good as my own, "can you direct me to the Whale's Head tavern?"

I could bring forth no better than a stammer in answer. She was the second stranger that day to ask for the Whale's Head, which my father had remarked the previous evening for a noted resort of bad characters; and verily, she appeared to be the last sort of woman who might be expected to have anything to do with the kind of roistering wickedness which went on there. Also, I could not forbear asking myself how came so fair a maid aboard a Spanish frigate.

In the soft lanthorn light she was anything but Spanish in her looks. Dark, yes, with hair that shone a misty black, but her eyes were as blue as Darby McGraw's, and her nose had the least suspicion of a tilt to it. Her mouth was wide, with a kind of twist at the ends that quirked up oddly when she laughed and drooped with a sorrow fit to crack open your heart if she wept. And she was little more than a child in years, with a manifest innocence which went oddly with the question she had asked me.

A slim foot tapped impatiently upon the cobbles as I stared.

"Well, sir," she said coldly, "does it happen you do not know English better than Spanish?"

"N-no," I managed to get out. "But the truth is, the Whale's Head is no place for such as you, mistress."

Her eyes narrowed.

"I do not catch your meaning, perhaps," she answered. "It is my father I go to meet there."

"But he would never favor your coming there at this hour," I protested. "Indeed, you should never think of it."

"I will be the judge of that," she retorted, instantly haughty. "And if my father is there I can come to no harm."

"If he is," I said. "I doubt you have mistaken his ordinary."

"No, no," she said decidedly. "I heard him speaking with them of it. But it may be you are right, sir, and I will not be so ungrateful as to flout a kindly stranger's well-meant advice. Juan can go into the tavern when we come to it, and I will hide outside. But somewhere I must walk, for my feet are all dancey with the way of the sea, and we shall be away again with the tide in the morning. This is the last dry land I shall tread in many a week."

"If you will allow me, I'll put you on your way for the Whale's Head," I offered. "I must walk in that direction."

"Sure, sir, it is a great favor you offer," she answered. "I cannot but thank you."

And she gave an order in Spanish which fetched the underofficer she called Juan and one of his men out from the shadows. They fell in behind us as we walked off along the line of the warehouses.

"You are upon a long voyage?" I ventured.

"You may well say so," she cried. "From here to the Floridas, and after that on to Havana and the cities of the Main."

"But you are never Spanish?" I said. "I ask not in idle curiosity, though—"

Her laughter was like a chime of bells.

"Sure, they say I am Irish as the pigs in the Wicklow hills where I was born."

And all of a sudden she was grave again.

"I'm not knowing your politics, sir, but there's maybe no harm in just telling you my father was of those who opposed the Hanoverian and fought for King James and Bonnie Charlie. And because his own king cannot employ him, he serves Spain."

"It is not pleasant for an Englishman to think of all the brave gentlemen who must serve foreign monarchs," I acknowledged. "But I hope you will be happy in the Indies, mistress."

"Oh, we shall not be staying there long," she answered blithely. "My father is an engineer officer, and he must inspect the fortifications on the Main and elsewhere. We shall return to Spain within the year. But look, sir! Is not that sign intended to be a whale's head?"

"Yes," I said. "This is the tavern."

One look at its flaring windows and the cutthroat gentry who swaggered in and out of the low door convinced my companion that I had not misrepresented the character of the place. She drew back to the curb, and the corners of her mouth drooped sadly.

"Glory, what an ill hole!" she murmured. "Now for why would the padre come hither? Business, says he; but—"

And she shook her head with a vague and doubting emphasis.

"I would not seem to be thrusting myself upon you, mistress," I said, "yet I am fearful your Spaniards can not make themselves understood. Will it please you that I inquire within for your father?"

She considered, catching a corner of her lip betwixt white teeth.

"Troth, sir," she answered finally, "I see not how I can avoid going the deeper in debt to you."

There was a moment's pause.

"And how shall I—"

"Ay, de mi!" she exclaimed with a bubble of laughter. "How stupid of me to be forgetting! I am just a maid off the sea to you. Ask for Colonel O'Donnell, sir, and tell him his daughter waits without."

I shouldered a drunken sailor from my path, lowered my head to pass under the lintel of the tavern's entrance and so gained the hazy blue atmosphere of the lagoon, cluttered with tables, foul with smoke and stale ale fees, abuzz with rough voices brawling oaths and sea songs.

It was the chorus of one of these songs which first distracted my thoughts from the Irish girl outside—a wild, roaring lilt of blood and ribaldry:

"Fifteen men on the Dead Man's Chest—
Yo-ho-ho, and a bottle of rum!
Drink and the devil had done for the rest—
Yo-ho-ho, and a bottle of rum!"

I looked to the corner whence it came, and discovered the one-legged sailor, John Silver, thumping the time with a pewter mug on the table-top as he led the group around him, foremost among whom, after himself, was Darby McGraw, flaming red mop standing out like a buccaneer ensign, shrill voice carrying above the thundering basses of his companions—as villainous a crew, to outward seeming, as I had ever looked upon. I noted especially a pasty, sallowy-faced man, whose shifty eyes were masked by a skein of greasy black hair, and a big, lusty, mahogany-brown fellow with a tarry pigtail, who evidently found as much satisfaction in the song as poor, fuddled Darby.

Silver saw me almost as soon as I spotted him, and with a quick word to the others, got to his feet and stumped across the room, dragging Darby after him by the arm.

"So you came after him, Master General, did you?" he shouted to

The Greatest January in History!

Announcement of tremendous price reductions and vital improvements was followed by the greatest January in Dodge Brothers history.

Retail sales for the four weeks ending January 31st were 14,943, an increase of 67.4 per cent over the same period of 1925.

Mid-summer business in January!

When the drastic reductions went into effect, Dodge Brothers, Inc. said frankly that they were offering the greatest values in their history.

How well the public realizes that these really ARE the greatest values is proved in a definite and emphatic way by the remarkable record for January.

A man of seventy years and a boy of twenty went out together for an evening's entertainment. Each of them spent $10 having a good time. But what actually happened? The elderly man spent perhaps a little more than $10, possibly as much as $20. But the boy spent not less than $40 and possibly as much as $90! Why? Because he had probably fifty years ahead of him in which that $10, if saved, could have been earning interest. In a savings account or in later investments it would have doubled itself a number of times.

IT'S UNFAIR COMPETITION

Newspapers, especially the smaller ones of the nation, are just now organizing a campaign to persuade Uncle Sam to refrain from printing return addresses on stamped envelopes at cost in competition with little printers. Under existing conditions, Uncle Sam hires salesmen in the persons of postal employes, to solicit the business, write up the orders, transmit them to the printer, collect the bill and deliver the printed job at the consumers's office.

Why the smaller newspapers alone should be subjected to that kind of competition from their own government cannot be explained and there is prospect that the printing service that the government has rendered practically free to users of stamped envelopes will be abolished by this session of Congress.

Other business enterprises that are perennnially threatened with government competition below cost, if taxes and overhead were calculated, should join with the newspapers in the effort to get Uncle Sam out of the printing business for the general public, in competition with private enterprise, and thus strengthen the principle of confining government activities to the functions of government.

THE BUSINESS MAN WRITES HIS AD.

Many a shrewd man, proprietor of a well conducted business, makes grave tactical errors in the advertising he prepares for his local paper. He sweats and writhes over copy that makes him ridiculous in the eyes of readers—his customers and potential customers. And no business has so much prestige that it can afford to invite ridicule.

Errors in grammar, punctuntion and the like are forgivable, if they are not downright raw and painfully frequent. Few of us are totally innocent of such mistakes, at some time or other. Likewise, an advertiser will be pardoned for misstatement or overstatement—for those are slips that can be corrected. But to make a statement that is tactically wrong!—that is what the critical reader pounces on with fiendish relish.

For instance: Who could help being amused, when one business house fatuously displays the information that it is, say, twenty years old; while, directly opposite, on the page, the competitor informs, as he has always done, that his business was founded just twice as long ago. This direct comparison of age, at the expense of the newer house, makes excellent advertising for the older. This seems altogether too flagrant to be true. But it isn't—it occurs.

Or, again, an advertiser may select a layout or setup identical with that which has identified a competitor's advertising for years. What more natural than to conclude that our erring advertiser knows no better business pattern than his competitor's? Again—flattering to the esteemed competitor.

Such mistakes are the less forgivable in the light of the fact that it is a sorry business indeed, that is without features that will win it preferment. Every good business man strives to incorporate some characteristic excellence into his service to patrons; or, that characteristic excellence has borne fruit in a large volume of business, an attractive housing for the institution—something peculiar to that enterprise. There is the proper source for "institutional copy."—National Advertiser.

EAST JORDAN WINS FROM LOCAL FIVE

Seniors Trim Freshmen, 14 to 12, in Preliminary

Charlevoix continued her losing streak Tuesday evening when they lost to East Jordan, at Hooker's garage, by a score of 18 to 10.

The game was fast and hard-fought from the first whistle up to the end of the contest. East Jordan started the scoring by ringing up two field goals during the opening minutes, holding their lead from then on to the end. Charlevoix never seriously threatened, although occasional spurts brought fans to their feet in the hope that the locals were going to turn the tables and win one. Poor passing and inability to locate the basket seem to be the main fault of the locals, while the East Jordan boys played a steady game with good team work, making good their trys for baskets. Hallett refereed.

In the preliminary game the Senior class team won a fast and interesting game from the Freshmen, 14 to 12.

FLAGS PRESENTED SUNDAY AT M. E. CHURCH

Church Filled With People to Hear Washington Program

Patriotism was much in evidence last Sunday evening at the Methodist Episcopal church. The pastor had announced a Washington Feature service, and in spite of the stormy weather outside, the church was filled with people for this patriotic and worshipful service. Special features of the evening were, patriotic hymns, a patriotic prayer hymn, prayer under the light of the cross, the presentation by two Sunday school classes of a large silk American flag and standard and a similar sized and quality Christian flag and standard, the setting of the flags by "George and Martha Washington," the specially prepared ritualistic service in which the entire congregation participated in acceptation of the flags, and appropriate solo sung by Mr. Claude Greenway, and a Washington sermon.

The pastor's subject was, "The Soul of Washington." He developed the idea that the principal difference between George Washington and Napoleon Bonaparte was the quality of soul that each brought to his task. The Virginian brought certain qualities of soul to the American task which were sadly lacking in the Corsican. Among those qualities which Washington possessed, which were discussed, were the unselfishness, the faith in a particular Providence, the churchly minded disposition, and the love of peace which were the characteristics of the great Virginian. He quoted Washington as saying about the war, "My first wish is to see this plague of mankind banished from the earth." His comment upon this was, "Personally, I see no hope for a warless world unless the nations and peoples of the world really elect Jesus Christ as their individual King and Leader." The presentation of the two flags was very fittingly timed to mark the anniversary of the birth of him of whom it was said that he was "First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen."

TWELVE COUPLES ENTERTAINED WITH BRIDGE

Mr. and Mrs. Glenn See Give Party Monday Evening

Mr. and Mrs. Glenn See entertained 12 couples of their friends last Monday evening, February 22nd, at their home on Dixon avenue.

Bridge was the main feature of entertainment. First prizes for men and women were won by Dr. and Mrs. L. V. Simmons, Mr. and Mrs. Forrest Fowler winning the consolation prizes. After the session of cards, the hostess served a dainty luncheon. The guests upon departing voted the affair very enjoyable.

Ellsworth's first team will play Charlevoix's second basketball team on Wednesday evening of next week. Girl's teams from both schools will play the preliminary game.

giving the city good streets, good police regulations, plenty of street lights, and very best of water and, in every way, conducted the affairs of the city in a businesslike manner.

Another aspirant for city offices makes his announcement in this issue of the Courier. John H. Bugbee wants to be supervisor of the second ward. We believe he is fully qualified to fill the office. When the votes are counted Monday night the choice of our citizens will be revealed. Other candidates may appear before primary day. They will all be voted for in the same manner.

Use your pencil with caution or you will lose your vote. Write the names of the men you vote for, plainly, under the head of the office they want, and spell their names as indicated above. If you designate the name of your candidate by the use of printed stickers, be sure and place them in the right place. It will be a mess whether you write the name or use a sticker, and we are not envious of the tangle the election board is up against.

Also remember this: Whether you write the name or use a sticker, put an (X) in the ( ) before the name.

MILLION LEFT IN TRUST TO WIDOW

According to Will of the Late Robert D. Stuart

An income of $5,000 a month was guaranteed Mrs. Margaret J. Stuart, widow of Robert D. Stuart, director of the Quaker Oats company and for many years a summer resident at the Chicago Club, in a will recently filed says the Chicago Tribune.

Mr. Stuart died January 26 at Pinehurst, N. C. He left an estate of $2,100,000, according to the estimate of his attorney.

The Woodland aveaue home, Chicago, and the Charlevoix summer home were deeded to the widow in the will. She was also granted the income from $1,000,000 in trust. After bequests to charity and relatives, the remainder of the estate was divided among the three children.

Income Tax Expert Coming

For the convenience of those who are liable to file federal income tax returns, a deputy collector of internal revenue will be in Charlevoix at the State Savings Bank, March 1st and 2nd, to assist taxpayers in preparing their returns. No charge will be made for this service. The matter of filing your income tax return should be given immediate attention, in order to avoid penalty and interest.

OVERLAND AND WILLYS—KNIGHT AGENCY OPENS

Brown & Wallace to Handle Well Known Make of Cars

Charlevoix is to have another automobile agency and sales room which will be opened and running almost as soon as this announcement reaches our readers.

The well known local firm of Brown & Wallace, proprietors of the Sinclair Gas Station, have taken over the agency for the Willys-Knight and Overland cars, with headquarters at the Central Garage, corner of State and Antrim streets. A full line of both cars in fours and sixes will be shown in their sales room.

Wm. Wallace will be the active manager, with Henry Block as head salesman over a selling force. Mr. Block will, however, continue his garage business and general repair work at the old stand.

Few cars are better known to the public than the Overland line, and the establishing of an agency here will give those who wish to buy any of the numerous models produced an opportunity to deal with a local concern. Representatives of the agency are now on their way from Detroit with a drive-away of Overland models which can be seen in their sales room.

Go-To-Church-Sunday

"Sight Seeing With St. Paul"—sermon subject next Sunday 10:30 a. m.

"Joseph and Jesus"—sermon subject next Sunday 7:00 p. m.

The evening service will have special features of interest, echo singing, choral singing, orchestra selections, question box, prayer hymn, Gospel sermon. There has been requests, made that a question box be utilized in the Sunday evening service. Already questions have been proposed—that should be answered. Next Sunday evening the pastor will answer one of them, "Is spiritualism biblical or modern?" This will not require many minutes to answer, and there will probably be time for more answers to questions. The pastor is glad to give his point of view to any honest inquiry, and any one is invited to send him questions by mail, or drop them in the collection plate when it is passed at the worship hours. It is not necessary to sign your name to your question, but you may if you wish.

After the Junior sermon next Sunday morning the Juniors will have a lesson in the Junior room with Mrs. Simmons in charge.

The Epworth League hour is 6:00 p. m. Crowded attendance attests the ability of the Epworth League to meet a demand of the young people.

Sunday school meets at noon each Sunday.

Next Sunday brings the church to the middle of the conference financial year.

Next Sunday is Go-To-Church-Sunday. A cordial invitation is extended to the public by all churches of the city to come to church next Sunday, or, in fact, any Sunday in the future.

NEW PALACE THEATRE

ATTRACTIONS FOR THE COMING WEEK

Thursday, February 25th

Robert Frazer and Clara Bow in "THE SCARLET WEST." Come on out—Sweep the plains with your forefathers—grab your gun—swing astride that waiting pony and dash hell bent for leather to protect the ones you love. There's the touch in it that tingles the blood—there's the spirit of great events and great loves. You owe it to yourself to see it!

Also Al. St. Johns in "Curses!" A thrilling, blood-curdling, smashing, crashing hokum comedy with thrills, chills and a hundred laughs. Benefit of Senior Class.

Saturday and Sunday, February 27 th and 28th

Buck Jones in "THE DESERT'S PRICE." Cast as a young ranch owner, Jones, who is called up to do two fisted fighting, makes things highly interesting for the enemies of two young Western girls who have been thrown upon their own resources. This is a rip-roaring, double-barreled drama of the plains.

The comedy will be a laugh-getter and you will drive the blues away when you see it. "Failure" is not what it seems.

Also another educational picture, "The Sugar Trail." These pictures will give you some idea of the great Sugar Industry.

Wednesday, March 3rd

Adolphe Menjou and Bessie Love in "THE KING ON MAIN STREET." See the King—on the boardwalk, eating "hot dogs" and "shooting the Chutes." On broadway, flirting with flappers. On Main Srteet, falling in love. Laughter and heart-tug linked in a really great picture.

Also a Fox News Reel. Travel the world with the News Reels. The very best form of travel and amusement.

make himself heard in the confusion. "And ashamed o' myself I oughter be, says you, and with reason, too. But I'm not one to lead a likely lad astray, and all Darby's had was good, ripe ale and two earsful o' sea-gossip, as'll give him things to dream o' for nights to come."

"I Did Not Come After Him," I Answered.

"I did not come after him," I answered; "but as I am here he had best return home with me. Where did you get my name, Silver?"

He pulled his forelock knowingly.

"Why, from Darby, o' course, sir—not that anybody on the water-front couldn't 'a' told me, seein' what a kind-hearted, friendly young gentleman you are. But asking your pardon for the liberty, sir, can I serve you in any way?"

"I don't think so," I told him. "I am seeking a Colonel O'Donnell."

I fancied a flicker of surprise stirred the bluff friendliness mirrored in his face. He stared around the room.

"Never heard o' the gentleman, sir, which ain't surprizin', seein' I was never here before this morning, myself; but I ran into some old shipmates of mine as gave me the run o' the place, and it may be I can find out for you from one o' them. Just you wait here a shake, Master Ormerod, and I'll see what I can do."

Silver disappeared through a door at the rear in company with one of the drawers, and in a few minutes he came swinging in again on his crutch, ahead of a tall, hatchet-faced man in a rich dress of black-and-silver, whose gold-hilted sword proclaimed the gentleman. This man Silver ushered to me with a prudely hearty courtesy.

"Here's luck, Master Ormerod," he called when he was within earshot. "My friend had heard tell the colonel was above-stairs. This here's the young gentleman I spoke of, your honor. My duty to ye both, sirs, and always pleased to serve."

And off he swung on his crutch again to be received with acclamations by his cronies in the corner.

The hatchet-faced man gave me a keen glance, almost a suspicious glance, I should have said.

"Well, sir?" he said. "I understand you desired speech with me?"

"If you are Colonel O'Donnell—"

He nodded curtly.

"—I am to tell you that your daughter awaits you outside." I concluded.

He was genuinely startled.

"My daughter? But who are you, sir, who act as her guardian?"

I was nettled, and did not hesitate to show it.

"She asked me the way hither when she came ashore," I retorted, "and, deeming it scarce probable that you would care to have her enter the tap-room, I even offered my services to fetch you forth to her."

I saw now his resemblance to her, for the corners of his mouth twitched down in the same way her's had. And he muttered something like a curse in Spanish.

"It seems I am beholden to you, sir," he answered stiffly. "She is a child, and vastly ignorant of the world, and I must be both father and mother to her."

I bowed and stood aside to make room for him to pass out.

"Master Ormerod, the seaman called you, did he not?" continued O'Donnell. "Perhaps, sir, you will permit an older man to compliment you upon an honorable department."

A slightly pompous tone invaded his speech.

"I am not unfamiliar with the chief centers of our Old world society, Master Ormerod, and I have the honor to hold the office of chamberlain to a monarch, who, though he may not be named upon English soil, will some day recover the estate a usurper has deprived him of. I need say no more, I am sure."

"I understand, sir," I replied. "And may I suggest that Mistress O'Donnell is awaiting you?"

He brushed by me with a click of impatience, and Darby and I followed him to the street. As we all three emerged, Mistress O'Donnell darted up to her father and caught at the lapels of his coat.

"Ah, padre," she cried in a brogue that clotted and slurred her words, "you'll not be holding it against me because I wearied of the ship and would feel the earth crumbling under foot, and me so lonely for lack of you I was near to weeping the while I sat in my cabin with naught to do but read my Hours!"

He wilted, as must any man have done, flinging his arm around her with a gesture that verged on the theatrical.

"Tush, tush, Moira," he rebuked her gently; "'twas unbecoming in you, and in Spanish lands such conduct would lead to trouble. See that you do it not a second time. I will give you in charge of Anne; and, having had your taste of freedom, you must return aboard, for I have matters yet requiring my attention. Ah, yes, and you must thank this gentleman properly for his gallantry. Master Ormerod, my dear! His father is a great merchant of this town."

Mistress O'Donnell swept me a willowy curtsey, and as I bowed acknowledgment I wondered where he had secured such exact information about me.

"Sure, I'll not be after trying to thank you," says my lady to me with a twinkle in her eye. "For I couldn't find the words would express my gratitude. But for you, 'tis an awful fool I'd have made of myself this quarter-hour past."

Colonel O'Donnell hemmed reprovingly.

"Let it be a lesson to you, my girl. My thanks to you again, Master Ormerod. My compliments to your father, if it please you. Good night, sir."

I understood that he wished to be rid of me, and accepted the cue.

"Good night, sir." I replied. "And a fair voyage to you, mistress. If I can be of further service, pray command me."

"No, Master Ormerod, here our paths diverge," she answered softly, and placed her hand upon her father's arm.

A moment later I was hurrying north and west, Darby Meltraw chattering beside me.

CHAPTER III

A Caller in the Night

We sat late at dinner that night, for my father must needs have me repeat at length the tale of my experiences during the day, revealing a perturbation unusual in him, although Peter Corbier ate on with placid solemnity.

"I have heard of this Colonel O'Donnell," said my father when I had made an end. "He was in Scotland with Prince Charles—one of the Irish crew who bogged a promising venture," if what men say be true. I marvel at his temerity in landing here, for there must be a price upon his head in England. Doubtless he was consorting with some of our Jacobite sympathizers at the Whale's Head—a fitting place for such an intrigue!"

"The captain of the frigate called upon the governor this morning, so Master Colden told me, with a cock-and-bull story of a mistake in his reckoning that took him north of his course. I smell the taint of a Jacobite plot!"

"Mistress O'Donnell said they were for the Floridas," I protested. "Sure, they are not far out of their course."

My father smiled for the first time.

"The little maid would have no knowledge of her father's purpose. And if she did— No, no, lad. I had my share of plotting in my youth. Our Jacobites are a pernicious lot. But there! In such a devious business we might not hope to reach the truth, nor am I greatly concerned thereat. Most Jacobite plots are ill-planned sallies by desperate, misguided men. No, boy, what irks me most is the tidings you had of the one-legged sailor. Silver, you called him? Yes, I like it not to hear the pirates are outside our harbor. It hath the look of daring beyond the ordinary. If Murray—"

The door behind me opened, and I saw my father's jaw drop. Peter, at my right hand, let his eyelids blink, then went on quietly cracking nuts between his huge fingers.

"Did I hear you call me, Ormerod?"

The voice from the doorway had a chill, level quality that was as resonant as the tolling of a bell.

"'If Murray—' I thought I heard my name?"

I screwed around in my chair. There in the doorway stood the most remarkable figure I had ever seen. A large man, straight as an arrow despite the years that had planted crow's feet so thickly about his eyes, his square shoulders showed to advantage the exquisite tailoring of the black velvet coat he wore. His small clothes were of a fine yellow damasked silk, and his stockings of silk to match. Diamonds flashed from the buckles of his shoes, his fob, his fingers and the hilt of his dress-sword. A great ruby glowed in the Mechlin jabot that cascaded from his throat. Over his arm hung a cloak, and under his elbow was tucked a hat cocked in the latest mode.

But it was the memory of his face that abided with you. The features were all big and strongly carved; the nose was a jutting beak above a tight-lipped mouth and a jaw that was brutally square; the eyes were a vivid black, decked with tawny lights. His hair was of a pure, silvery whiteness and drawn back, clubbed and tied with a black ribbon. His cheeks and brows were furrowed by a maze of wrinkles, yet the flesh seemed as firm as mine. In every way he suggested breeding, gentility, wealth; but there was a combined effect of sinister power and predatory will, a blur of ruthless egotism which took no account of any interests save his own.

He acknowledged my prolonged stare with a slight bow, mildly derisive.

LUTHER BURBANK AND HIS INFIDELITY

Luther Burbank is a horticulturist, who lives in Santa Rosa, California. He is a horticulturist, which means that he is a cultivator and culturist of plants. By cultivation and careful selection of plants he has been able to produce varieties of plants and fruits hitherto unknown.

Thoughtful people have a high regard for Mr. Burbank, as a horticulturist. But these same thoughtful people knew that every human being is a creature with limitations. They would not visit Mr. Burbank to secure skilled dental treatment for themselves. They would not seek his services for an appendectomy at his hands. They would not call on his office to secure expert medical advice. Nor would they visit him when in need of carefully fitted lenses for their eyes. He is not recognized as an authority in civil or electrical engineering. Mme. Curie does not consult him regarding radium. He is a scientist. But his sphere of specialization is limited. Any specialist this day is such because he has limited his study to one realm of investigation. Mr. Burbank is a "Plant wizard." When this is said, all is said, that is outstanding about this useful American citizen.

In the face of all this, what difference does it make what this particular mans says or thinks about religion? The fact that he is a plant wizard, does not qualify him as a religious authority, any more than it makes him a surgical or engineering authority. If we desired to know how to raise cabbages, we might trust the advice of Mr. Burbank. But we would never think of going to him to learn about religion. Especially is this latter fact evident in view of his recent disclaimer of religious knowledge as published in the daily press of our land.

It is very easy to note some Burbank fallacies as we find them recorded in his published statements. He states that Jesus Christ was an infidel. This is a mistaken idea. Jesus believed in God. Jesus believed in prayer. Jesus belived in the future life. Jesus believed in the Christian religion.

He states that science disproves life after death. Sir Oliver Lodge, at the head of the scientific societies of England, disagrees with him. This learned scientist is certain that he has established communication with the departed.

Prof. Agassaiz, of the recent past, was a recognized scientific authority, and he was a devout Christian who ardently subscribed to the doctrine of a future life.

Thousands of scientists today and yesterday, are and have been firm believers in life after death.

Mr. Barbank himself gives no reason whatever for his statement, and cites no proof whatsoever.

All religions are tottering, he says. But he offers no proof of this. Mr. Ingersoll made a similar statement a few years ago. Chaplain McCabe, who was then the general secretary of the Church Extension Society of the Methodist Episcopal church, whose task was to provide for the building of new Methodist church buildings, saw his statement in a daily paper and wired him as follow: "Dear Bob: We are building two a day. McCabe. "We might also truthfully say at the present time, "Dear Luther: Christianity was never going stronger than it is today."

A parting shot from his press report is, "I do not recognize any great universal power." God is bowed out of the universe. The Burbank brain has made possible many beneficent plant achievements. Does Mr. Burbank mean to tell us that he fails to recognize an Infinite Brain back of that greater achievement, the visable universe? His logic works well in the realm of Naval Oranges, but falters in the realm of a universe.

Mr. Huxley ask Prof. Houghton why he believed certain things which Huxley professed to be unable to believe. "May I speak frankly?" said Houghton. "Certainly," said Huxley. "Then, said Houghton, "I do not know how it is except that you are color blind." Huxley was much impressed with that answer. He said, "Well, it may be so. If I were color blind, I should not know it myself." Darwin records how in the absorption in the pursuit of purely physical science, the spiritual and artistic faculties of his soul atrophied and died. He says, "Disbelief crept over me at a very slow rate, but was at last complete. It may be truly said that I am like a man who has become color blind; and the universal belief of men of the existence of redness makes my present loss of perception of not the least value as evidence." May it not also be that Mr. Luther Burbank is religiously color blind, and that his word is of not the least value as evidence in religious matters?

MICHIGAN AT WORK

Michigan is one of the leading states in America's export trade. Each day boats and trains haul from the state goods destined for every quarter of the globe.

Several factors explain Michigan's prominence in this respect.

The state borders Canada, which is one of the good foreign customers of the United States, and Canadians naturally turn to Michigan for many of their needs.

Michigan's can load goods to be shipped easier to the Atlantic seaboard.

The state is one of whose Michigan is the most productive, a leading place in growing importance in our exports, so that American motor cars now dominate the world market.

Probably the greatest factor is the diversity of Michigan products both in industry and agriculture.

Department of Commerce figures show that Michigan exports average $15,121,000 in value each month. Ohio's exports average $11,276,000 a month, although Ohio is a more populous state than Michigan. Illinois exports are slightly ahead of those of Michigan, being $19,510,000 monthly. Michigan exports are far ahead of all other states, being about twice those of Wisconsin and more than three times those of Indiana.

The Illinois State waterway has 98 feet of fall in its 60-mile course from Lockport to Utica. It expects to utllize that fall in the production of 75,000 electrical horsepnwer which, it is figured, will net the state $1,500,000 a year. "This revenue ulone," says a publication issued by the Illinois Division of Waterways" would pay for the cnnal within a few years."

State's Big Share

The four power houses of the state waterway hydroelectric system will be located at the dams built to secure slack water nnvigation between Lockport and Utica. All the power houses will have the same flow from Lake Michigan that goes through the drainage canal power house at Lockport. In addition the Brandon Rond power house will have the flow of Des Plaines river, which is around 100 c. f. s. nt low water and 13,000 at high. The Dresden Isle power house will add to these the flow of Kankakee river, which ranges from 200 to 400 c. f. s. in low water nnd up to 40,000 at high. The Marseilles power plant will have the addition of several small streams, while the Starved Rock turbines will be helped along by Fnx river as well.

But while all the waterway power houses will have a larger flow the individual heads will be less than that at Lockport.

The Brandon Road lock will have a lift of 31 feet, but the water power head will be less than that. It is expected 28,000 electrical horse power will be generated there. The Dresden Island lock lift will be 17 feet, and a yield of 18,000 horse power is figured. The lock at Marseilles will have n 21-foot lift, but the state's power development there is figured at only 7,000 horsepower because the state will hnve to share the power with privnte right owners whose titles run back to 1867. At Starved Rock, near Utica, the locks have a 16-foot lift and the water bead is expected to produce 22,000 horsepowe r.

Two Interests Get Benefit

Col. W. V. Judson, division engineer, in presenting estimates for the federal improvement of Illinois river below Utica, which involves the removal of four existing dams which have been drowend out by the present diversion from Lake Michigan, makes the following pertinent suggestion: "Inasmuch as the sanitary district of Chicago and the state of Illinois receive practically all of the benefits that accrue from maintaining the flow of 7,500 c. f. s., from Lake Michigan, the property of the dams being removed at the expense of those interests may well be considered."

Col. Judson in the same report makes these salient points in commenting upon the wisdom of the federal investment in the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway: "The state (of Illinois) presumably will recover the value of its expenditures from water powers. The sanitary district can, perhaps, justify its expenditures in excavating the drainage cunal by the resulting conveniences afforded for sewage disposal. The United States will be out of pocket if a through waterway is created which does not prove to be an economical avenue of commerce."

Why Shouldn't They Pay?

Col. Judson might have gone farther and suggested the propriety of paying also from water power comenues the cost of constructing compensating works in Niagara and St. Clair rivers to restore lake levels, lowered by the diversion that alone makes the water power valuable. Such a suggestion, from indications already given, might not be unfnvorably received by the Chicago and Illinois interests, particularly if a trade were made for larger diversions, up to 10,000 c. f. s.

Niagara interests might object to such a compromise, but that is another issue in which the lake states outside of New York have no direct concern.

Private Power Plants

Only one private water right of consequence exists on the waterway. This is at Marseilles, where the Marseilles Land & Water Power Co. holds a charter that runs back to 1867. W. D. Boyce, the publisher, acquired this charter from the original farmer owners, and used the power in the manufacture of print paper. The pollution of the water by Chicago sewage ruined the print paper industry, but made the water power more valuable through the increase in flow.

Now the Marseilles Land & Water Power Co. leases the power rights to three big concerns which use them at Marseilles, in connection with plant investments running into millions. Two of the concerns huve national reputations. The National Biscuit Co. makes all its cartons at Marseilles, using Illinois river power. The Certain-Teed Co. has a huge plant there. The remainder of the power is taken by the Illinois Power & Light Co.

About 10,000 horsepower is now generated at Marseilles with a head of 10 to 12 feet. It is proposed to increase this head by raising the dam three feet as part of the state waterway project. It is expected this increased head will compensate the private owners for the amount of water thut is taken by the state for its canal, lock, and power station at thut point.

It is interesting to note that the manager of the Marseilles Land & Power Co. is W. S. Richmond, one of the best informed engineering authorities on lake levels and water diversions. He is the nuthor of much of the so-called Warren report, regarded as a government hand book on these matters. As a government engineer he was in charge of the investigations on which the report was based. He will be quoted in an article coming in this series on the subject of lake levels and their restoration.

There is a suspicion that it may be one of the main incentives in the present drive on congress for immediute authorization of 10,000 c. f. s. diversion from Lake Michigan. The political slogan "10,000 cubic feet per second needed for navigation purposes" might be translated as really meaning "10,000 c. f. s. desired for water power."

Grand Blanc and Grand River avenue roads. It relates the Grand Blanc road was the first project of road building into which the state entered thut hecause of the vital importance of the road—M-10—work on it had to be rushed when no contractor would take it on private account. Its total cost is given as $397,772 of which $20,890 was for preliminary work, leaving $376,875 for actual building costs for a pnvement 8.057 miles long, averaging 9.13 inches deep and 20 feet wide. The cost per mile is given ns $46,776 which, Rogers points out, if reduced to an eight inch thickness, would have cost but $42,815. Heavy traffic, he tells the legislature, made the heuvier pavement necessary.

Grand Trunk Settlement

The senate has passed the governor's forced Grand Trunk deal in which that road is compelled to give up its special charter obtained in 1834 and by which it escaped virtually all taxation except an annuul tax of $25,171.40. The senate vote on this was 26 to 1, Senutor Bernie L. Case of Ithuca voting against it.

Under the terms laid down by the governor the Grand Trunk surrenders its present right-of-way between Detroit and Pontiac, accepts a right-of-way provided by the state, permits the state to pay for the acquired property and moving its tracks.

The road surrenders its special charter and will pay, in addition to the specific tax $21,171, the full cost to the state of the new property and rebuilding, at the rate of $200,000 per year until the state's money is returned.

Then the road agrees to come in under the general law pertuining to taxation of railroad property and will pay into the primary school fund of the state between $300,000 and $400,000 in tnxes.

Maintenance Fund Increase

A hill introduced by Senator Orville Atwood would increase from two to four millions the annual state trunk line mnintenance money and would permit the highway department to use for proper purposes a half million formerly specifically appropriated for non-trunk line and bridge mulntenance work.

Under the terms of a joint resolution the bars have been let down to the introduction of about a dozen new measures or amendments if the governor asquiesces in the requests of various legislators to send in messages permitting the passage of various pet measures.

The House defeated a proposed resolution by Rep. John Holland, Gogebic, denouncing the world court, when he sought suspension of the rules. Rep. Holland declares he will receive sufficient support before the end of the session to voice unalterable opposition to the world court idea. Eleven members voted with him to pass his resolution.

Rebuild Mt. Pleasant

Rep. Ernest Dexter, Mt. Pleasant, introduced a bill seeking a $700,000 appropriation to rebuild the Central Michigan Normal buildings recently destroyed by fire. Reception given this measure in the house presages its passage without trouble.

"Man wants but little here below," remarked the dressmaker as he measured the length of the gown.

A Great Year ~ A Great Car ~ and Lower Prices

1925 was the greatest year in Dodge Brothers history.

More than a quarter of a million Dodge Brothers Motor Cars were built and sold, yet demand was far in excess of production—and continues to mount.

To meet this world-wide need for a smart and dependable motor car, Dodge Brothers, Inc. have recently completed a $10,000,000 program of expansion, vastly increasing production and lowering the cost of manufacture.

Remarkable new machine equipment has also been installed—further reducing costs and perfecting quality.

As a result Dodge Brothers, Inc. were enabled on January 7th, to announce a schedule of prices that has revolutionized all previous standards of motor car value.

Prices all the more impressive because they apply to a dependable and trusted product made still better in many vital respects—

Engine operation incredibly smooth and quiet.

Instant engine response and elasticity.

Stylish new bodies finished in rich and distinctive colors.

Exceptional driving vision.

And the most important advance in steel body construction since Dodge Brothers pioneered in building the first all-steel body.

PARTY NEARLY CAUGHT ON ICE

FLOES BREAK LOOSE TWICE WITHIN TWO HOURS

Party of Five Towed Themselves to Safley on Cake of Ice.—Coast Guards Rescue One

Last Sunday, six Charlevoix men fishing through the ice on Lake Michigan, narrowly escaped being stranded on the ice over night, and, incidentally, got more excitment out of the udventure than is usually the case.

Emmet Denny, Henry Marshall, Dick Marshall, Paul Heise, Ray Graves and Crover Geneit left early Sundny morning for the fishing grounds about two miles off the Charlevoix piers in Lake Michigan. Graves proposed to be the look-out man and stationed himself on the shore side of a large crack which run across the bay between north and south points. The other men in the party proceeded across the crack and were soon busy snaring the wily trout, all the party with the exception of Denny going about two miles farther out on the ice.

After having fished for nbout an hour, a shout from the look-out started the excitment. Denny, who was acarest on the outside of the crack, looked around to find that the ice had parted and n gap some eight foot wide had opened between himself and Graves. He immediately notified other members of the party farther out on the ice and, after traveling a considerable distance to the north, fonnd a place where the crack was narrow enough to allow himself and the other fellows to cross

After regaining their composure, the boys again started fishing, this time on the shore side of the crack, and, as an extra measure of precaution, marked their position by an object on the shore so as to detect any future movement of the ice. They had not long to wait. Hardly an hour had past when they noticed their land mark had slipped by und the ice opened again about twenty-five rods nearer shore. This time the situation presented more difficulty as no place could be found to get across. After a lengthy consultation, n plan was arrived at. Uncoiling one of the fish lines, the hook and sinker was thrown across the gap in the ice and became caught on the other side. Using this to pull himself across the opening, Denny mounted a small cake of ice and towed himself to the other side. According to the boys, George Washington crossing the Delaware had nothing on Denny crnssing the "briny deep" on a five-foot cake of ice. In a like manner the rest of the party, with the exception of Grover Geneit, were rescued, the whole party riding a larger cake across. Geneit, who was way to the north of the rest of the party, arrived on the scene of rescue too late, the gap having opened to such an extent thut it was impossible tn get a line to him. He was later brought ashore by the coast guards, who pulled a boat across the ice and went out after him.

The boys are none the worse off for their experience and say they will try it again ut the next opportunity. We predict that if Jesse Lasky gets hold of this stunt, he will be on the scene the next time and film an "Uncle Tom's Cabin" scene.

Takes New Lease on Life

Mr. Antoine Sharrow, R. F. D. No. 4, Charlevoix, is a booster for pepgen. In his statement he wants others to know how this wonderful mediciae helped him, when all other remedies had failed.

"My stomach was so bad even pus come up when I coughed, after eating I would be in distress and puffed up condition, and my stomach would feel as thought it would burst. My appetite was fair, but what I ate soured, and gave me no nourishment.

"After taking Pepgen a short while I began to get relief. I am still taking it and it has practically cured the catarrh of my stomach. The gas is entirely gone, my appetito is good, I am gaining in weight, and I feel like a new man. Pepgen aurely helped me and I will keep right on taking it."

Signed, Antoine Sharrow,
Charlevoix, Mich.

Pepgen which is so highly recommended for stomach, kidney and liver troubles, stimulates the nerves in vnrinus parts of the body, purifies the blood, and is a great system builder.

In Charlevoix Pepgen is sold under a money-back guarantee, only by F. J. Fessenden, the druggist. If you want to know more about this wonderful spring tonic, and health builder, ask him.

CHURCH OF GOD
Wm. Eldridge, Pastor

Preaching services each Sunday at 10:30 and 7:30.

Sunday school at 12:00, our present Bible course used as a Sunday schnol lesson, on Christian fundamentals and Bible doctrine is being studied with greater interest and attention than any lessons we have ever used in our Sunday school. A need is felt for these lessons on account of the trend of the times. If all of the Bible can not be believed, why believe any of it? "Jesus Christ the same yesterday and forever." "All scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction and instruction in righteousness."

Prayer meetings each Wednesday evening at 7:30.

Political Announcement

I wish to announce to the qualified voters of the Second Ward the City of Charlevoix that I will be a candidate for the office of supervisor, on the Republican ticket, at the March 1, city primary. The duties of this office will not be new to me, having served for several years in this capacity while a resident of Norwood township. Your support is respectfully solicited. John H. Bugbee.—Adv. 8t2.

SPECIAL GO-TO-CHURCH SUNDAY

NEXT SABBATH SELECTED BY PASTORS OF CITY

Churches of City Unite in Iovitation to Public to Attend Church of Preference

Next Sunday has been selected by the pastor of the city as a special Go-To-Church-Sunday for all the churches of Charlevoix. It is a fitting thing to follow the religious visitution of the city hy the churches with a cordial invitation on the part of the churches for all the people of the city to attend the church of their preference next Sunday, and as often therenfter as possible.

In accord with this idea, the churches hereby unite in extending such an invitation in this public manner. A cordial welcome will be given to all whn attend next Sunday's services of worship. The welcome will extend to all succeeding Subdays.

Interesting and profitable hours of worship may he spent in any of the churches. They are our local institutions, and all local people may well find a place in some one them they may chose where they may feel quite at home. There is no attempt made in this invitation to reason why any one should go to church. No doubt there are plenty of reasons. All that is presented here is a cordial invitation to attend next Sunday and make it a great day for the churches and for the city.

Particular church announcements appear elsewhere in the several church announcements. Go-To-Church-Sunday.

LOCAL GIRL OPENS BEAUTY PARLORS

Will Occupy Room in Rear of E. L. Denny's Barber Shop

Miss Hazel Geer of this city, a recent graduate nf the E. Burnam school of heauty aad culture, Chicago, opened a benuty parlor in the rear of E. Denny's barber shop last Friday.

Miss Geer is a local girl and has recently returned from Chicago, where she has been attending school this winter. Equipment for the parlors has been installed and any work in her line will be taken care of in the future. The Courier joins with others in wishing Miss Geer success in her new venture.

DOUBLE FUNERAL FOR MR. AND MRS. NEWLAND

Aged Atwood Couples Passed Away Two Days Apart

Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Newland, residents of the Atwood district for many years, passed away at their farm home last week, Mrs. Newland dying Friday, February 12, at six o'clock a. m. and Mr. Newland Sunday, February 14, at 1:00 p. m., at the ages of 78 and 79 respectively. Both had been ill for a period of many months.

The aged couple were united in marriage in Holland, their native land, in the year 1873, and came to Michigan in 1884. To this union were born seven children, two dying in infancy, and a daughter, Miss Katherine in 1924. Those left to mourn the loss of their father and mother are: Mrs. E. R. Jones of Norwood, Mrs. M. B. McPherson of Lowell, John and Bert Newland; of Detroit; also eighteen grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

Mr. and Mrs. Newland were lifelong members of the Dutch Reformed church and were greatly loved by their neighbors and friends, who will mourn their departure.

The double funeral services were held from their home at Atwood, Tuesday, February 16, at 9:00 a. m., and at 10:00 a. m. from the Dutch Reformed church, Mr. A. B. Clark and Mr. Bouman officiating. Singing was rendered by Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Clark.

RESULTS THAT LAST!

Proven By Charlevoix People

Thousaads of kidney sufferers have tried remedy after remedy with only temporary benefit. That's mighty discouraging! But ane kidney remedy has earned a reputntion for lasting results and there's plenty of proof right here in Charlevoix.

Read the experience of ane who used Doan's Pills years ago and now makes her endorsement even stronger.

Mrs. Frank Smith, 307 May St., Charlevoix, says: My back was sore, stiff and achy and when I did nny stooping, pains darted across my kidneys. I felt nervous, depressed and completely worn out. Dizzy spells also came aver me and my kidneys acted irregularly. I used a few bnxes of Doan's Pills and they completely cured me." (Statement given May 4, 1920.)

On October 9, 1924, Mrs. Smith said: "The cure Doan's made for me has been lasting."

KEEPING COWS MEANS $94,020 COUNTY INCOME

Based on $20 Fertilizer Valuation Per Cow

An added income of a $94,020 a yeur is enjoyed by Charlevoix county farmers indirectly as a result of keeping cows, according to the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. This income is in the form of a more fetrile soil due to the manure of the dairy cows in this country. On the basis of practically a $20.00 fertilizer valuation per animal per year, this means a total of $94,020 added to the richness of the soil in this county every twelve months.

Manure is a source of the most valuable plant food obtainable, says the Institute, but to preserve it ut its highest value or efficiency, it should either be put directly to the fields each day or conserved until such a time as the opportunity offers itself to spread it. Feeding trials have proven that an ordinary cow, while putting from 15 to 18 per cent of the total energy of the feed she consumes into milk, actually returns to the soil 80 per cent of the elements of soil fertility in her feed in the form of manure. This had led many dairymen to discover that the purchase of good concentrate feeds for for their cows not only more than pays for itself in increased milk production but that it also supplies necessary food to farm crops that are expensive when brought in the form of commercial fertilizer.

TWO ROADWAYS WILL BE OPENED TO LAKE

City Reaches Agreement With P. M. Officials Last Week

A committee appointed by Mayor Bergeon from the city council, met with officials of the Pere Marquette railway last week and reached aa agreement whereby the railway company has consented to open up two streets leading from Ferry avenue through to Pine Lake.

For the past few years the city has had no way to get to the lake other than passing over private property. According to the agreement reached, the Pere Marquette will build a roadway across their tracks and Eaton avenue will be extended to Pine lake. The sixty-foot right of way, about a hundred feet north of the Standard Oil company's tanks, which was nequired by the city when they traded their right to the lower end of Belvedere avenue to the Belvedere Club for the purpose of building their pavilion, will also be opened and a trestle and roadway built to the lake there.

This move on the purt of the city nfficials is very commendable. We, as a city, cannot afford to allow ourselves to be excluded from the beach of Pine lake.

HOSPITAL NOTES

Miss Georgia Parsons of Ellsworth submitted to an operation for appendicitis last Monday.

Next Sundny is Go-To-Church-Sunday. A cordial invitation is extended to the public by all churches of the city to come to church next Sunday, or, in fact, any Sunday in the future.

RESULT OF VOTE CAST MONDAY

PRIMARY ELECTION NOW AN AFFAIR OF THE PAST

Vote Reveals Choice of People in Regards to Candidates—Contests in Two Wards

The battle of stickers and peacils is over. Charlevoix, by the vote east Monday, sigaified her choice of men to fill eleetive, offices for the next year, or for whatever the term of office voted upoa. Rumor, from some source or other, says the election has illegal features abaut it. This may be true with regard ta that part of the eleetion law which says that candidates for eity, couaty or state office must file petitions within a certain date prior to primary day. We all admit this was aot done. Not wilfully, but for the reason the law was not uaderstood, aor had it been explained to the caadidutes desirous of declariag themselves as such.

The 1925 legislature chaaged the date of filing petitioas. This chaage was not aoticed until after the date of filing had passed. Charlevoix is not the oaly plaee in the state that is in the same mess. We know of dozens who were up agaiast the same propositioa we were. It seems that the change ia the law was aat generally known. It is hard to pin the responsibility for the mess oa any individual or individuals.

The March primary election was conducted aad carried out as aear to the law as possible. By the vote east, the intent af our vaters is shown. Now if some disgruatled caadidate or dissatisfied citizen, or any of uor legul advisors are desirous of "startiog something," let 'em go to it. Those in charge of the eleetion did the best they could, under the eonditions.

The vote east was about the lightest of any primary in the history of the city. In the three wards the total couat was 283. Basiag our figures oa the number of legal ballots counted hy the election board for the head ticket, wo find that Mayor Bergeon receiived 183, the other hundred hein gspoiled by the voters in their attempt ta properly write in the name of their candidates, by stickers beiag improperly placed, or by forgetting to put a cross in the square opposite the oame of the candidate. This is the mess we spoke about last week. The same average in spoilage will be found ia the vote of all candidates.

In the first ward the contest between H. A. Craig and Aady Ross for supervisor brought out a large vote. Ross got the vote out all right, but when the mess was cleaned up his netive campaign taetics proved a boomerang and Craig won by a two to one vote.

John H. Bugbee won out over the present second ward supervisor, Simon M. Rose, by a vote of 79 to 23. No real contest was made for any other office on the ticket.

The vote by wards as cast follows:

First Ward

Mayor:
- Bergeon 42

City Clerk:
- Lamphear 35

City Treasurer:
- Cook 42

Justice of Peace:
- Dodge 16

Park Commissioner:
- Zeitler 1

DR. W. MITCHELL WILL CONDUCT FREE CLINIC

Children Under Nine Years Will Be Given Preference

Dr. W. W. Mitchell will conduct a free clinic for children at his dental parlors, Saturday forenoons, during the months of March and April.

This free work will be especially for the benefit of those children whose parents are not in financial circumstances permitting them to give the attention they should to their children's teeth. Children under nine years af age will be given preference, with extra time being devoted to those of more mature years. Teeth should be given constant eare, especially with children, and parents should be exceedingly greatful for this splendid act of cooperation on the part of Dr. Mitchell.

MAKING PROGRESS IN SCHOOL WORK

Dorothy Lucile Bowen Stands at Head of Class

Little Miss Dorothy Lucile Bowen, 10 years old, former studeat in the Loeb school, aow a resident of Detroit, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Claade Bowen, is making a woaderful school record aecordiag to a letter received by the Courier last week.

Miss Bowen passed her second aad third grades at the Loeb school with Miss Clare Thorsen as teacher. Last Jaauary she was passed to the 7th B class in Detroit school. A compositiaa writtea in a 15 minute test was chosen as the best in the entire grade, including both A and B classes. Her composition follows:

If I Were a Fairy

"If I were a fairy aad had wings, I would flit about in cool, shady spots, hide in the breezy tree tops and daace on the sunay roses.

"I would make poor little children happy, cold oaes warm, and huagry ones full. I would play with them all—large and small, rich and poor.

"I would give pleasure to old folks, make flowers bloom in their gardeas aad put love into the heurts of the loveless.

"I would make the whole world bloom in happiness. But, alas, I am aot a fairy—oaly a little girl."

W. C. T. U. COMMUNITY BANQUET

PROGRAM OF READING AND SONGS GREATLY ENJOYED

About One Hundred Citizens Hear Hon. Parm C. Gilbert's Address on Law Enforcement

About one hundred citizeas of Charlevoix aad vicinity availed themselves of the opportunity to hear our circuit judge, the Hoa. Parm C. Gilbert, speak on the subject of law enforcement at the community banquet held at the M. E. church last Wedaesday evening.

Not once did the speaker differeatiate in laws and his remarks covered all laws ia a geaeral way. To him law is the foundatioa of our government and must be recogaized by its citizens. No enforeement is possible without such recognition.

The only enforcement that is real and righteoas is enforcement that is without partiality. Partiality in enforcement is an evidence of the hand of tyraany.

Laws are made to assure safety and equality and back of every statute must be the right on which it is based. We might burn up all the statutes of Michigaa today and our rights would be the same.

Public seatiment is necessary to the enforeement of law and public seatlment is created in the home nad the family circle. As they go out into the world they take with them the spirit of the home. Aad this sentimeat which the home has produced is kait together with the sentimeat of other homes and the result is called public sentiment.

Msay people heard the Judge speak at the banquet for the first time and every oae was impressed with his haadliag of the subject.

Prior to the address Mrs. Stewart eatertained the company with an appropriate reading and Mr. Greenway sang two selections by Harry Lauder; both the reader and the singer were heartily applauded.

The banquet was given uader the auspiees of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the committee in charge is to be congratulated on the success of their nrrangements.

Miss Critchlow proved a wonderful entertainers and the bunch extended many happy roturns with the hope that birthday celebrations would come oftener in the future.

CLEAN UP AND THEN CASH IN

WHILE PROPERTY BOOM IS IN SIGHT

Boyne Citizen Believes That Careful Preparation Will Bear Fruit in Dollars

Apropos of the prevailiag regioaal activity la real estate traasactioas, the Boyne Citizen makes the following comments which are equally applicable, it will be observed, to this or sny other Northern Michigaa eommuaity.

"It is hard to tell just how fsr this resart boom will go. Oae thiag is certain the communities which are best prepsred or extend themselves the most will receive the most benefits. The apparent possibilites should arouse sll citizens uloag the lines of civic betterment. Each property owner should assist in the development of his community by improving his owa property. Careful atteation to lawas, plantiag of shrubs and trees, care of curbs, the use of paiat may so eahaace the value of any persons property to such an extent that he may make big moaey thru his improvemeats.

Dress Up"

"One has only to refer to the trend of property in Florida to find that town property adjaceat to shore property, has beaefited greatly. This has been true of both residence snd business property. But to eateh the public eye property must look uttraetive. Let us elean up all "sore spots" and dress up all others. It may meaa big moaey in our pockets. Nor is the possibilities of enhaaceaeat in values limited to shore property und towa property. It nlso extends to farm property. A great maay city people would like to own country homes. They are goiag to piek off the beauty spots in the valleys and oa the hill tops. Therefore the farmer should beautify his property; repair his feaces, paint his buildiags, slickup his gateway aad yard aad cultivate his crops to an extent that his whole farm will look neat. Who knows but what the next motorist drlving by may take a fancy to a place that he will puy a big price for it."

Splendid advice and worth following up. We would suggest immediate improveaents such as a coatinuation of the eement side walk west on Park aveaue aroaad the corner east on Clinton street; cleaning up of vacaat lots on Dixoa aveaue and removal of weeds aad brush; strict observunee of ohnoxious weed law by elimiaatiag the rag weed aad giving the hay fever sufferers a chance to breathe while they are hore; a general clean-up at the rear of all stores oa Round Lake, so that people traveling by boat will aot be shocked and leave with an uafavorable impression of our lake front. We could suggest other improvemeats but these are among the most importsnt.

WHAT IS THIS GULF WATERWAY

ILLINOIS PLAN OF BIG CONERN TO ALL MICHIGAN

No. 9

(By Arthur W. Stace.)

What damage has been done by taking water from Lake Michigan and seadiag it down the Mississippi valley to the tropical gulf of Mexico instead of through the Great Lakes to the sub-Artic gulf of St. Lawrence?

Ask great lakes navigators and they will answer that it has cost them millions of dollars in reduced cargoes.

Ask shore iaterests and they will point to harbors handicapped by low waters, to exposed flats where there should be rippling waves, to boathouses and docks left high and dry, to resort property damaged and made less attractive.

Ask farmers behind the dikes in the rich bottoms of the Illinois river and they will show you unsatisfied flood damage claims running iato millions of dollars.

Ask the Niagara power haroas aad the folks along the St. Lawrence aad they will set up a woeful wailing about wnter robbers and power thieves.

Chicago Not Alone to Blame

Most of these blame the diversion at Chicago for all the law water injuries on the Great Lakes and all the high water injuries in the Illinois valley. And most of them are as positive nnd as vehement in their assertioas as are the Lakes-to-Gulf boosters who dogmatieally iasist that 10,000 eubic feet per second liversioa is absolutely esseatial to Lakes-to-Gulf navigation.

But ask the eagiaeers who have studied the matter, men qualified by techaical traiaing and special knowledge to speak with nuthority, aad they will qualify the hlame just as they qualify the need for 10,000 c. f. s. diversion for navigation purposes.

The eagineers admit that the various interests mentioned have suffered damage aad that this damage runs big in the aggregate. But with a professionnl penchaat for accuraey they produce facts and figures to prove there are other big contributiag causes in addition to the diversioa through the drainnge canal.

That Last Six Inches

For iastance they point out that while the main level for Lakes Michigaa and Hnroa in 1925 was 3.11 feet below the main level of 1918, aad 1.37 feet below the low wnter datum for the two lakes, the drain at Chicago is responsible for not more than six iaches of this. Other causes, which will be touched upoa in the next article, are responsible, they say, for the remainder.

This dictum of the eagiaeers should be remembered when blamiag Chicago for dsmage resultiag from the lowering of the lskes. It is the last six inches lost for which Chicago is responsible. Aad that six inches is particularly costly when lake levels are as low as they have been since the beginnlng of 1921.

The big item of damage is to through navigation on the great lakes, from Lake Superior and Michigan to Lake Erie and visa versa. Back in 1918 when Engiaeer W. S. Richmoad was making his study preliminary to the formulating of the so-called Warren report on the lake levels situation, he figured how much the loss in revenue would be to hoats due to the aecessity of loadiag lighter because of lack of full-capacity asvigable depth in chaaels or harbors.

Loss to Lake Boats

His figures showed thut a lowering of the lake levels oae-tenth of a foot would cause aa aaaual loss of revenue to bulk freight vessel owaers of $590,000. This was on a total bulk freight toaasge nveraging 97,000,000 for four years eading in 1918. This year's total wss probably greater than that, as the toaaage of the Sault Ste. Marie ship caaal aloae was 81,875,108.

Oa this bnsis the loss of six inches of water, 5-10ths of a foot, in Lakes Michigaa, Huron aad Erie, would cost vessel owners $2,950,000 in a single year. It would be expeasive to shippers, also, as lesseaed carrying eapaeity would aaturally shove up eosts.

This lass would not be suffered, of course, when lake levels are up to low water datum. The levels have beea 1.37 feet below that datum in 1925, and were some iaches below it all through 1924.

Lake hoats, engaged in through bulk freight carryiag, includiag the

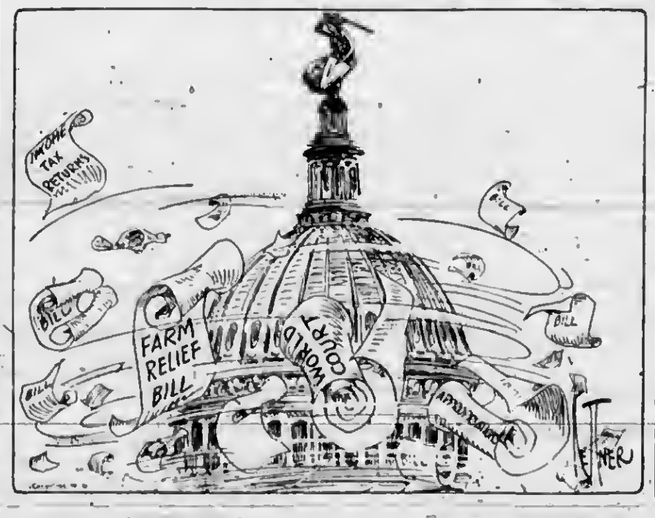
Whirl of March Winds



BITTER DEBATE FEATURES MEET

REPRESENTATIVES BATTLE OVER PROPOSED MEASURES

Mt. Pleasant Normal Bill for $750,000 Passes—Session Expected to Go Full 20 Days

(By Ed. Nowack)

Final sessions of the House of Representatives last week fairly bristled with charges, counter-charges, bitter thrusts at past actions on the part of some represeatatives as well as the State Administrative Board, and demands for more highway figures. A detailed financial statement of the Groesbeck administration given the house and senate by state treasuerer Frank D. McKay, featured the session nad was accepted by the legislature without a word of comment.

A minority group in the house, lead by Rep. R. W. McLain, of Quincy, Rep. McDonald, Laurium, and Rep. Fred Wade, of Saugstuck, lauached an attack to block all consideration of the Kirby highway bill and the Brower Graad Trunk ratification measure, until a "complete accounting and report of every penny spent by the state highway department" had been given the house. This group went down to defeat on the Kirby hill, although a last minute ameadment proposed by Rep. Nelsea O'Beirne, Ionia, prevented the Kirby measure from passing onto third reading. Passage of this hill this week, in the concluding days of the session, is predicted even hy those who opposed it. The Graad Truak bill went to third reading and now awalts final passage.

A hnd split in the ranks of the former well known aati adainistration men, such as Rep. George Roxburgh, Reed City, the last remaining tower of strength for the aatis, presaged complete victory for the Groesbeck progrnm. Several of this group, following numerous conferences with the governor on the Grand Trunk bill, chaapioaed this measure on the floor after previously informing other members of their group that their "close-up" of the governor and his exhaustive explanation, satisfied them the deal is the best possible solution to a problem that has failed to produce satisfactory answers since the days of ex-Gov. Pingree.

Eliminate Five Per Cent Clause

The transportation committee, commending the governor for his work in whipping the Grand Trunk into line, in reportiag out the measure deleted the five percent interest clause suggested by the road, on the grounds that to accept this interest would delay by several years the final pnyment of the origiaal coastruction costs of the new road to be advanced by the state. This delay would prevent the state from putting the road on the equitable tax rolls with other utilities.

Rep. Roxhurgh, chairmaa of the Trsasportation committee handling the Grand Trunk bill, aad Rep. Eugene Kirby, chairman of the Roads and Bridges committee, haadling the Kirby bill, were msde targets for keenest inquiry on both bills. They took oa "all comers" but aot uatil after Rep. Sherman Callendar, Detroit, had relieved Roxburgh, and Rep. Ming of Cheboygaa, had aided Kirby, were the votes on which the bills were passed forward taken.

The week's session started with a bang. Published reports had stated that the state treasurers records disclosed a $1,800,000 deficiency in state sinking fund receipts. Statu treasurer Frank D. McKay, who hasn't appeared in the legislature at all, nad who has the reputation of a quiet, but hard hitting, hard working nnd rather independent official, didn't let the matter grow cold. A short time after he had seen the report McKay, over his signature, sent to both branches of the legislature the following statement on state finances definitely setting forth the man-haadled question of the state's finances:

McKay's Finance Statement

"The statement that the stato sinking fund receipts are $1,800,000 shy is misleading as shown by these facts: Acts Nos. 1 and 2 of the Public Acts of 1925 appropriate not

The Right Breakfast for Workers

Eat Food that Supplies "Balanced" Ration After Night's Fast

IF YOU feel tired, hungry, "fidgety" hours before lunch, don't jump to the conclusion of poor health. Thousands have nuenergetic mornings because they start days with breakfasts lacking in certain food elements.

To feel right, you must have a well-balanced, complete breakfast ration. At most other meals—lunch and dinner—you get it. But breakfast is a hurried meal, often badly chosen.

Thus Quaker Oats, containing 16% protein, food's great tissue builder, 58% carbohydrate, its great energy element, plus all-important vitamines and the "bulk" that makes laxatives seldom needed, is the dietetic urge of the world today.

It is food that "stands by" you through the morning.

Quick Quaker cooks in 3 to 5 minutes. That's faster than plain toast. Don't deny yourself the natural stimulation this rich food offers you.

CHAPTER III—Continued.

"Your son, Ormerod?" he continued. "My grandnephew? Robert, I think, you named him, for the redoubtable Master Juggins of London, who aided you to start life anew after you had contrived to wreck yourself upon the rocks of a foresworn Jacobite career."

My father rose slowly to his feet.

"Yes, he is my son, Murray. It is neither his fault nor mine that he is also your grandnephew. As to his name, Robert Juggins was a better man than you or I, and you cannot inspire my son against me by hinting at hidden chapters of my early life. He knows that I was deluded into serving the Stuarts, and lived to learn that country comes before king."

The man in the doorway nodded his head.

"I would not seem discourteous," he remarked suavely. "I note another old friend, Ormerod—or perhaps I should say an old enemy. Permit me to observe, Corlner, that you wear well with the years—as well as myself, indeed."

Peter squeezed a hickory-nut between his forefinger and thumb and looked up vacantly into Murray's face.

"Ja," he said.

"Lest you should be tempted by some misapprehension," pursued Murray, "I may inform you that I have every reason to suppose myself safe from any measures you might take against me. I hope to do what I have come here for tonight without injuring anybody, and if you gentlemen will listen to me quietly for a few moments I am confident that the issue will be harmless for all of us."

He cast his cloak and hat upon a chair by the fire, and put his hand upon the vacant one betwixt my father and me.

"May I?" he asked.

My father, still standing, said nothing; and Murray, with a shrug, accepted the silence for consent, sank gracefully into the seat and drew a golden snuff-box, studded with brilliants, from a pocket.

"With your permission," he said, springing the cover.

A fragrant whiff of snuff-tobacco tickled my senses as he offered it generally.

"'Tis excellent stuff," he remarked. "Ripe Rip-Rap. What? None of you? Ah, then—"

He dusted a pinch under his nostrils, inhaled and daintily used his handkerchief, a lace-edged morsel such as women carry.

My father leaned forward across the table, a blaze of hatred in his face.

"'Tis true, then!"

Murray regarded him in some surprise.

"True? My dear sir, I assured you 'twas Rip-Rap."

My father turned to Peter and me.

"After I told you—about this man, Robert—I hoped that I was wrong—that I had done him an injustice. But now he has convicted himself out of his own lips."

Murray gently deposited the snuff-box upon the table in front of him.

"Ah," he murmured. "I see! You were referring to my nickname, or, shall we say, nomme de guerre?"

My father laughed bitterly.

"Nomme de guerre! Name of a pirate! But let us have it, fair and openly, Andrew Murray. Are you Captain Rip-Rap?"

"I suppose most people would agree with your description," replied Murray; "although personally I prefer the word buccaneer. It is susceptible to so much wider use, and there is about it a suggestion of— However, we are not interested here tonight in the more abstruse branches of etymology. I am the person popularly known on the high seas as Captain Rip-Rap, and I fancy I might have logical grounds for arguing that if any disgrace adheres to me by that admission, 'twas you, Ormerod, who drove me to the practice of what you call piracy."

"'Tis like you to take that tone," said my father. "I drove you from the practice of what amounted to piracy on the land. There is no difference in the way you earn your livelihood today, Murray. You were an outlaw, and you are an outlaw."

"I fear you are incapable of doing me justice," sighed Murray. "You should know that I have always labored to serve higher ends than the mere sordid pursuit of money, such as has possessed you and those like you."

He swung around suddenly upon me.

"But I am forgetting my purpose!" he cried. "Stand up, grandnephew, and let me have a look at you."

I would not have heeded him, but my father said quickly:

"Do as he asks you, Robert. I'd not have him think you are crooked in the legs."

So I stood.

"A likely build," he remarked warmly. "You favor your father, I see—you are your mother, my maid Marjory. Ah, sweet chit, would she were with us now! A sad loss; a sad loss, lad!"

The expression which came to my father's face was terrible in its intensity of passion. He leaned closer to Murray, while to the cheekbones, his nostrils pinched in.

"Murray," he said, "make an end of such talk! As you value your life, mention her not again. I know not what cards you hold up your sleeve here, but if we all die in the next moment I will slay you as you sit if you profane her memory with your foul tongue."

Murray stared up at him coolly and took a pinch of snuff.

"Ah, well, you were always prejudiced," he answered. "I— But it serves no purpose to reopen old wounds. I am of one mind with you there."

"What Does Our Young Man Himself Say?" He Asked.

He leaned abruptly across the table.

"I will be frank with you, Ormerod—and with Nephew Robert here. I am somewhat in difficulties—"

"If 'tis money—" began my father.

My great-uncle's gesture was sufficient check to this.

"I am not in difficulties for money, although I am like to be in difficulties shortly in connection with an embarrassing quantity of it. In fine, sir, I am upon the point of launching the coup of my career, one which will entail consequences of a stupendous character, and in the end, I venture to predict, echo in throne-rooms and chancelleries. Aye, kingdoms shall—"

He broke off.

"It is not necessary that I should go into that. Suffice it for the present if I say that I am in the position of a man who has partially turned an unwieldy band of wild animals. My own ship I can rely upon up to a certain point, but I have associated with me—"

"That would be Flint?" interjected my father.

"I am flattered by the knowledge of my affairs which you display," replied my great-uncle with one of his courtly inclinations. "Yes; I had occasion, when I first went to sea, for a competent navigator. Flint served me in that capacity until I became independent, and I then fitted him out with his own ship. We have cruised in company since. I am not betraying a professional secret when I add that he is a man whose undoubted force of personality is offset by a certain turbulence and crudeness of wit which make him difficult to handle—increasingly difficult to handle, I may say: I foresee trouble with him in the future in connection with the coup to which I have already referred. I require a young man to stand at my elbow and assist me in curbing unruly spirits. I promise a great future for such."

"Command of his own pirate craft, no doubt?" pressed my father.

"That would be an offer to draw most stout youths," returned my great-uncle. "Bah, what is piracy, that you and your kind prate against it, Ormerod? Is it any worse in character than four-fifths of the business practiced in this world? What are you and those like you but men who seek to deprive others of their lawful gains that you may add to your stores what the others possessed? I take from the wealthy, who can afford to lose, what they have dishonestly got, more often than not, and much of what I win I contribute to the Cause to which you gave your first loyalty."

"An admirable code of ethics," observed my father. "But come to the point. What will you have? That I should apprentice Robert to you to be indentured a good, honest, trusty and skillful pirate?"

"Even so."

My father sat back in his chair.

"I'll not," he said.

Murray treated himself to a pinch of snuff.

"What does our young man himself say?" he asked.

"I say that you offer me no inducement," I answered as shortly as I could.

"Odslife," he swore. "No inducement? My dear nephew, I offer you an open, bracing life—for a brief space; assure in a brave venture; an opportunity to rehabilitate your family, to rise to place, title and honor."

"On a pirate's deck?" I jeered.

"From a pirate's quarterdeck," he corrected me gravely. "I am on my last cruise. The Royal James is to vindicate her name. Aye, in years to come she will be regarded as a shrine of loyalty and devotion, and to have sailed with Andrew Murray in her—Why, sir, who remembers today of Robin Hood aught but that he was true to King Richard in adversity?"

The man's surety was amazing.

"This passes all reason," said my father wearily. "You must be insane."

"Not at all," retorted my great-uncle. "I am the leading practitioner of my profession. Wluter, Davis, Roberts, Bellamy, all the more noted—ah—pirates of recent years, were small fry compared to me. I tell you, Ormerod, you stand in the boy's way."

"He is not a boy, but a man," snapped my father. "And able to judge his own course."

"So be it."

My great-uncle turned to me once more.

"It appears this decision is left betwixt us two, Nephew Robert," he said. "So I must inform you that I am determined to have your aid in any event—by force, if you will not accompany me reasonably."

There was a snap as a Brazil nut split apart in Peter's grip. Murray waved an airy hand in his direction.

"'Tis true that you are the most powerful man I ever met, Corlner," he remarked; "yet I urge you not to attempt violence. I have sufficient men in the house to overpower you, and I should not hesitate to slay Ormerod or you at need. The boy is the only one of you three whose life hath value to me."

"He means it, Peter," said my father. "Keep your hands down."

"Ja," squeaked Peter.

"You were ever a wise man, Ormerod," resumed my great-uncle. "I venture to congratulate you upon the soundness of your judgment. Now for you, Nephew Robert. Come with me you shall, but I prefer that you come willingly. Therefore I lay before you these inducements: Firstly, we sail upon a venture which hath a color of stale business, although a strict legalist would denounce it piratical—you see, I endeavor to deal honestly by you after my fashion; secondly, no barge is intended to you; thirdly, the rewards of our project will be singularly rich; fourthly, I design to exploit the advantages which shall accrue to me solely for your benefit—you, Robert, are my heir, and if I have need of you in the execution of my coup, nonetheless I shall be able to repay you for whatever you do in my behalf a hundredfold, both materially and otherwise. I am, after all, your nearest kin after your father, and I say in all humility my assistance is not to be despised."

"I won't go willingly," I answered. "Even did your arguments tempt me, I should resent your threat of compulsion."

"Admirably spoken," he applauded. "Egad, I perceive you have the proper spirit. You are exactly the lad I require."

"I am the lad you'll not get," I shouted. "Call in your bravos, and I'll tear their throats out for you."

"Gently, gently," he remonstrated. "My bravos, as you term them, are not lambs, Nephew Robert, and I must warn you that the killings would not be all on the one side. If you value your father, stand fast."

And he drew from a waistcoat pocket a silver whistle, which he placed to his lips. A thin blast piped through the room, and a dozen hairy scadoga surged in from hall and kitchen. Raps on the two windows indicated that others mounted guard outside.

YOU ARE ENTITLED TO KNOW THE FACTS!

20,000,000 motor vehicles now travel the American highways.

Safety for this vast army of travelers is a national issue, and where safety is involved plain speaking is a public duty.

It is high time the public realized—as experts have long realized—that automobile bodies should be made of steel—not of wood or any other fragile material.

Indeed, it is one of the mysteries of this usually progressive industry that the all steel body is not already in universal use.

It will be before long. Public opinion will demand it—as it now demands that railway sleeping cars be all steel.

For even a child knows that steel is stronger than wood—that steel will not splinter or burn—and that all steel bodies will stand up under impacts that would crush ordinary bodies to bits.

That is why Dodge Brothers pioneered in introducing the the all steel body—pioneered again recently, in improving and perfecting it—pioneer, now, in urging its adoption by every automobile builder in the world.

The issue is plain—

Manufacturers must build safely if the automobile industry is to hold its present high place in public usefulness and esteem.

And the all steel body—as exemplified in Dodge Brothers Motor Car—is the greatest single advance in motoring safety made in the last fifteen years.

The car will continue to be a "four." No reasoning buyer will be distracted from the issue of QUALITY by mere CYLINDER propaganda.

USE ENTIRE SECOND FLOOR FOR DISPLAY

Model Room for Furniture a Special Feature

Work is rapidly near completion on the new furniture display room at the Charlevoix Hardware Co.'s store. The carpenters have finished their work and painters are putting the finishing touches to the job at the present time.

The entire second floor of the building will be used in the display of house furnishings. Floors have been scraped, varnished and waxed and present a very pleasing aspect. A model room has been constructed in the center of the floor, in which suites of furniture representing different rooms will be displayed. At the left, at the head of stairs, a room has been arranged to handle mattresses, bedding, etc. Sample stocks will be on display at the store and orders will be filled from the W. E. Parmelee warehouse, where the goods are to be stored. A complete stock of house furnishings will soon be on display.

Around Orchard

WINTER SPRAYING QUITE NECESSARY

Winter spraying is not a precaution but a necessity, and now is the time to begin work. Steam-boiled lime-sulphur is one of the most important winter sprays for apples and peaches, and it is also foolproof. One may blunder in its preparation and application and fail to get the desired results, but it is almost impossible to injure the trees, if the spray is applied during the dormant season. Because of the difficulty in transportation and the excessive freight rates on this material, it is much more convenient and economical to make it at home than to buy it from a commercial concern, according to W. W. Moore, extension plant pathologist at Clemson college.

Where a good-size orchard is being cultivated it is advisable for farmers to install one of these plants. It will lower the cost of spraying and will also reduce the necessary labor in handling the spray materials. If only a small acreage is planted in a given community, it would be advisable to establish a community plant for making the lime-sulphur spray.

The construction of a steam-boiling plant for lime-sulphur spray is very simple and economical. All that is necessary is a small steam boiler capable of developing 20 pounds pressure of steam, two 50-gallon barrels, and some 1¼-inch pipe with necessary valves and connections. The plants can be set up in a very short time, and the boiling of the materials is very simple.

The plant pathology and horticultural divisions at Clemson college are ready to give all necessary aid in the construction of these plants. Anyone desiring this service should write to either of these departments at once.

Use Paradichlorobenzene to Control Peach Borers

"Since almost 100 per cent of the eggs of the peach tree borer are hatched by the middle of September, paradichlorobenzene may be applied at any time until October 10 for the control of the troublesome pest," says A. Freeman Mason, extension specialist in fruit growing at the New Jersey State College of Agriculture.

One-half ounce of paradichlorobenzene applied to three, four, and five-year-old trees for three weeks this fall, or three-quarters to one ounce applied to mature peach trees, will almost completely rid them of borers for the entire year. This is a great improvement over the old back-breaking method of digging them out with a knife in the spring.

Paradichlorobenzene, also "rullet "paracide," "hoercide," "crystal gas," and "p-c-benzene," is a white crystalline substance looking like epsom salts. It can be procured at any horticultural supply store, and at many drug stores. Apply it about the tree in a narrow, continuous ring above the topmost galleries made by the borers and approximately two inches from the tree. Fumes released by the crystals gradually permeate the soil and kill the borers. Do not allow the chemical to touch the tree. Cover the application with three or four inches of earth, free from trash. Pack the mound with shovel or foot.

If trees are heavily infested with borers below and above ground, divide the application into two parts. Apply one-half ounce at soil level and mound with dirt to a level even with the highest galleries of the borers, and then apply one-half ounce at this level. Cover the upper application with three to four inches of soil. When paradichlorobenzene is used on trees three, four, or five years of age, remove the mound after the worms are dead and throw fresh earth about the trunks. It usually takes three weeks to kill the worms.

Horticulture Notes

Choice apples should be picked as they ripen. Avoid bruising and wrap each apple in paper and pack away.

Clean up the red spider. In many sections this is the worst pest on apples, and this year it is especially bad. Trees lose in vitality when severely attacked by the spiders.

Grape anthracnose under ordinary circumstances is controlled by the usual spraying operations recommended for black rot. However, when the disease appears in an epidemic form it is advisable to spray repeatedly bordeaux mixture, and also to prune out and burn, not apply, diseased canes and bunches of fruit.

Currants will usually produce some fruit with no pruning, but for heavy yields of large berries they should be pruned regularly. The best fruit appears on one, two and three-year-old wood.

• • •

In sections where there has been dry weather, the strawberry bed may be endangered through the runners not getting rooted. The frosts will come and kill them. A little time spent with a hoe, burying the roots of the runners will make certain of a good growth for the next spring's crop.

Takes New Lease on Life

Mr. Antoine Sharrow, R. F. D. No. 4, Charlevoix, is a booster for Pepsgen. In his statement he wants others to know how this wonderful medicine helped him, when all other remedies had failed.

"My stomach was so bad even pus came up when I coughed, after eating I would be in distress and puffed up condition, and my stomach would feel as though it would burst. My appetite was fair, but what I ate soured, and gave me no nourishment.

"After taking Pepgen a short while I began to get relief. I am still taking it and it has practically cured the catarrh of my stomach. The gas is entirely gone, my appetite is good, I am gaining in weight, and I feel like a new man. Pepgen surely helped me and I will keep right on taking it."

Signed, Antoine Sharrow,
Charlevoix, Mich.

Pepgen which is so highly recommended for stomach, kidney and liver troubles, stimulates the nerves in various parts of the body, purifies the blood, and is a great system builder.

In Charlevoix Pepgen is sold under a money-back guarantee, only by F. J. Fessenden, the druggist. If you want to know more about this wonderful spring tonic, and health builder, ask him.

Faithful to His Trust

While attending his sheep on the downs of Pyecombe, near Brighton, George Pearce, an elderly shepherd, tripped over a rut and broke a bone in his leg, says the South Wales News in a recent issue.

His cries for help having passed unheeded, he determined to round up his sheep before seeking aid for himself.

With the aid of his dog he drove them into a pen and fixed several hurdles to prevent their escape.

Then, limping in great pain, he carried three bags of fodder, which he put in the troughs for the lambs.

Having made certain that his charges would not suffer, Pearce limped over rough ground to his cottage, nearly two miles awny, and there collapsed at the door.

INTEREST SHOWN IN PEARSON ACT

FIELD DEPUTIES INSPECT TRACTS IN THIS REGION

Bill Provides Tax of Only Five or Ten Cents Per Acre for Period of 25 Years

Owners of Emmett and Charlevoix county pine and hardwood cutover lands are showing considerable interest in the Pearson act of the 1925 legislature, which provides a mnnner in which such lands may be exempted from the general tux says the Petoskey Evening News.

During the past week field deputies from the conservation department have been looking over tracts of lands thut the owners desire to place in the commercial forest reserves of the state, and it is anticipated that several of them will be transferred.

Under the terms of the act, which was introduced by State Senator William J. Pearson of Boyne Falls, owner of such lands, subject to the approval of the conservation department, may list their holdings as n part of the state commercial forest reserve, and thereafter pay a tnx of five cents per acre on pine lands and ten cents per acre on hardwood lands.

Applications must first be filed with the department of conservation whose duty it is to investigate and examine the lnnds. If nppnoved, the lands are then exempt except for the aforesaid tax.

If left untouched twenty-five years and provided the per acre tax is paid, the owner mny cut the timber that has grown, paying thirty per per cent of the value to the state, and retaining the remaining seventy per cent.

With very little mature timber left in the locality, excepting the Reyeraft and n few other holdings, a number of taxpayers are looking up the possibilities of providing a timber supply for the coming generations.

PORTO BELLO GOLD

By Arthur D. Howden Smith

My father's face was a mask of mingled rage and fear—not fear for himself, but for me. He stared at the savage figures, the lured cutlasses, the ready pistols, almost with unbelief in the reality of his vision. And certes 'twas a weird spectacle in that orderly house in the town we of the province looked upon as the most advanced in the colonies—and became to me the more weird as I glimpsed next the hall door a grim mahogany face and a buccaneer look beneath a skein of black hair, and behind the two a familiar carroty head.

"Ho, there, Darby!" I called out. "What are you doing in such company? Did you know those men for pirates when you drank with them at the Whale's Head?"

"Sure, they ha' taken me into their crew," he answered brazenly.

"And 'twas you let them into the house and betrayed your master!" returned my father sadly. "I had not expected this of you, Darby. Have we not been kind to you?"

Darby wiggled uncomfortably.

"Oh, aye; main kind, Master Ormerod," he admitted. "But they would ha' had ye, whether or no. Sure, they're a grand crew, tricksy crew. And anyway, ye see, I was born to be a pirate. My truth, I was!"

Murray laughed pleasantly.

"'Tis a valiant youth, and should go far," he observed. "Moreover, he speaks the truth when he says we should have won our way in to you without his aid. The accommodation was convenient, but by no means essential.

"Where is Silver, Master Bones?" he added.

The man with the mahogany face touched his hat.

"John was seeing to it the servants was all secure, sir," he answered. "Here he is now."

A gap appeared in the ranks by the kitchen door, and the one-legged man I had met on the water-front that morning stumped in on his long crutch, as cheerfully serene as any honest householder.

"Was you askin' for me, captain?" he said. "We just finished up behind there—all gagged and roped, Bristol-fashion, safe for a day, sir."

And to me—

"My duty, Master Ormerod, and I hopes we'll know each other better soon."

"I find we shall need a cart, John," said my great uncle.

My father turned very pale.

"You—you— My God, Murray, you can't kidnap the boy this way! Think! There are troops in Fort George. Once the hue and cry is raised you'll be—"

"But it will not be raised," replied Murray calmly. "I regret it, but we shall be obliged to tie up you and Peter so that you will be incapacitated until some kind friend happens to call on the morrow. By that time we shall be at sea."

I snatched up the chair upon which I had been sitting and brandished it over his head.

"Call off these scoundrels of yours or I'll batter out your brains," I snarled.

"Jnho," he said, ignoring me, "you will be so kind as to pistol the elder Master Ormerod if his son launches a blow at me."

"Aye, aye, sir," answered Silver.

And he leveled a weapon at my father. I knew, without looking behind me, that Peter and I were covered by other men. It was Peter who spoke first.

"Put down der chair, Bob," he ordered quietly.

The man called Black Dog cast the noose of a rope over his head and jerked his arms close to his side.

A gasp went up from the room, and there was a hasty retreat from his neighborhood.

"Pistol that man, if you must," called Murray; "but use your cutlasses if possible."

"Neen," said Peter again. "We don't fight."

"We might as well be killed now as let them carry off Bob," said my father with a sob in his voice.

"Neen," said Peter a third time. "Deadt, you stay deadt. Perhaps Bob gets away from them some time. Better he be with Murray than he be deadt."

"Intelligently logical," commented Murray. "I commend the sentiment to you, Nephew Robert."

Peter's little eyes glinted toward him.

"I go with Bob," he said.

"No, no," denied Murray quickly. "You were not invited, friend Peter."

"If I don't go, Robert don't go," replied Peter. "Andt you don't go. Perhaps I don't kill you, but if there is shooting you don't get away. Ja!"

Murray contemplated this speech.

"Your proposition then," he said, "is that you insist upon sharing my nephew's new career or else will endeavor to secure the deaths of all of us, including his and your own?"

"Ja!" answered Peter.

"You may come," decided my great-uncle. "Your muscles should prove useful. John, I fancy we shall require triple bonds on this prisoner."

"Aye, aye, sir," assented Silver. "We ha' plenty o' stout manila. One o' you lads run bark and get those coils I left by the stove. That's the proper spirit, Darby. Always willin'. You'll make a rare hand, you will. And how about makin' fast that gentleman as is goin' to stay behind, captain?"

Murray looked at my father, and from him to me.

"Have you reconciled yourselves to what I may justly style the inevitable?" he inquired suavely.

My father collapsed into his chair with a groan.

"If you will not suffer the boy to be hurt!" he exclaimed.

"My word of honor to that," returned my great-uncle very seriously. "His comfort and safety rank ahead of my own, remember, for I anticipate that he is to achieve all those triumphs which fate denied me. 'Tis true I hope to sample them briefly, but—" and for the first time a shadow clouded his face—"I am, as you doubtless know, in my sixty-fourth year, and a sick'ning Providence, regarding the divinity of which I am inclined to share the skepticism of the French philosophers, is scarce likely to indulge me in a very prolonged extension of life's span. Nor indeed would I have it otherwise. I feel no inclination for the senility of extreme age. Do you submit?"

My father bent his head.

"Yes—for his sake—you; Robert, no violence. We are in a cul we cannot escape for the present; but rest assured I will do everything I can to secure your release."

My great-uncle motioned Silver forward.

"Make Master Ormerod as comfortable as possible, John," he instructed. "Yes, tie him in his chair. Ormerod, accept my advice, and leave well enough alone. Within a year, possibly—two, at most—the boy will be safe and advanced in fortune beyond your wildest dreams."

"Let me have him back as he is—'tis all I ask," groaned my father.

Murray took snuff.

"A highly correct attitude, sir," he remarked. "Have you more to say? Very well, John; you may affix the gag. No, not that gunnysacking. Here is a silken kerchief will do. And now, friend Peter, we turn to you—and you, Nephew Robert. I would these precautions were unnecessary. Let us trust your inclinations will become more friendly toward me upon closer acquaintance."

CHAPTER IV
An Inkling of the Plot

My poor father's face, with the tears standing in his eyes, was the last object I saw in the wan light of the guttering candles. The next moment my captors lugged me into the darkness of the garden and pushed me upon a hand-cart such as was used to fetch up the frailer kinds of merchandise from the docks. Peter's immense body already occupied most of the cart's cramped space, and I was squeezed precariously between him and the near side, the which Silver perceiving he prodded Peter into a more restricted compass and then spread a tarpaulin over both of us.

"Proceed, John," ordered my great-uncle's voice. "You remember the way? The Green lane, 'tis called. Four men should be sufficient to accompany you. I will go on by another street with the rest of our party."

"Don't ye worry yourself, captain," returned Silver.

Footsteps thudded away on the gravel, and I heard the scrutching of the one-legged man's crutch as he stumped in front of us and the cart jolted forward. We emerged into the Green lane, heading toward the East river, and a thrill tickled my spine as I heard the chantlag tones of old Diggory Leigh, our ward watchman.

"Ten o'clock of a clear, dark night, and the wind in the nor'west. And all's well!"

"Easy, all!" whispered Silver's voice. "Push on, ye swabs; push on! But hold your gab. I'll do the talking."

The steel piece on the butt of his crutch tinkled on the cobbles as he stumped ahead of the cart.

"Ho there, shipmate," he hailed cordially. "And does you do this the whole, livelong night?"

Diggory's lanthorn-slave jingled on the ground.

"I do," he returned in pompous tones. "What keeps you abroad so late? Y'are seafaring men, I judge."

"Now I calls that clever," protested Silver with unconcealed admiration. "You sees us in the dark, and straight off you says, 'seafaring men.' I can see you're a vigilant watchman, shipmate. I'd hate to be a nefarious fellow in your town. Blow my scuttle-butt, I would!"

Diggory's appreciation of this tribute was mirrored in his voice.

"'Tis essential that our citizens be protected," he answered. "Yet there are those who have accused me of sleeping on watch."

"Skulkers, they be—low-lived skulkers as ever was," Silver assured him. "I know how you feel. Here we've been a-workin' since snaup, a-shiftin' cargo and stowin' it aboard, and I'll lay you a piece of eight the captain never so much as serves out a extry noggin o' rum."

Diggory's stave jingled again as he sloped it over his shoulder.

"The wisest men are not always those in authority, friend," he said. "Ye might think, from the way some of the corporation talk, 'twas they bar the night-walkers and wastrels from the city's streets! Bah!"

And his wailing voice receded into Pearl street.

"What are you night-walkers and wastrels a-sniggerin' about?" demanded Silver of his following. "George Merry, I'll lay into you with my crutch. Put some heft behind this here blessed cart. Ain't ye ashamed o' yourselves, a-laughin' at a brave, hard-workin' watchman as keeps wicked pirates from liftin' your goods?"

"Look Sharp," Called Bones. "The Brig's Just Ahead."

A few hundred feet farther on we rattled off the cobbles onto the planked surface of a wharf.

"That you, John?" growled a voice.

"Aye, aye, Bill! Where's the captain?"

"Gone off in the jollyboat. That 'ere Spanish Irisher is a-waitin' him aboard."

Silver pulled the lanthorn from over our heads.

"Here, George Merry, can't you and your mates handle the big fellow? Two to his head and two to his feet—and drop him easy or he'll stove in the boat. Now, my gentleman—" this to me—"we'll pass you down, too. You must pull a strong oar with the captain for him to be so anxious to get you offshore hale and whole. It'll be place and rank for you, messmate, or a chance to swim wi' the sharks."

"Where's the red-headed little Irisher, Bill?"

"I sent him off with the captain," replied Bones. "Down wi' you, John. We'll cast off."

From where I now lay, propped up in the bow with my head resting on Peter's huge stomach, I could see the wharf a few feet above and the vague figures of the pirates and behind them the shadowy outline of the warehouses and an occasional dim light. Silver lowered himself to a seat upon the starboard of the wharf, dropped the butt of his crutch to the forward thwart, felt about with his one leg and came to rest in front of Peter and me. The crutch he allowed to slip to the bottom of the boat, and in its place he took an oar. Bill Bones found a seat in the stern sheets.

"All clear," muttered Bill. "Give way."

The oars fended off from the wharf, and the boat crept out into the stream, where it felt the full strength of the tide, just beginning to turn. The bow bounced up as the first wave hit it, and Peter, beneath me, emitted a dismal groan through his gag. Silver, bending diligently to his oar, looked over his shoulder.

"You would come, messmate," he said. "'Tis nobody's fault but your own."

Another groan from Peter, and he lay still.

As we rounded under her counter a couple of ropes rattled down to us, and I heard the creaking of tackle and hoist.

"Make fast the young 'un first," rasped Bones.

"Aye, aye, Bill," answered Silver, and I became conscious that the one-legged man and another were knotting a loose rope beneath my arm-pits. "All right, above there?" called Silver presently.

The block began to whine. The rope tautened; the unseen block whined louder; and I rose involuntarily from my position across Peter's belly. My feet were jerked from athwart, and I kicked the air. The grunts of men hauling in unison floated from the brig's deck, and as I rose faster I commenced to swing like a pendulum. Inside of a minute I was dangling over the bulwarks, feet kicking frantically for standing room. A man caught me by the arm and drew me inboard, shouting the while to "slacken away!" and so I came down again with a bump that was like to crack my knee-cups, deposited as so much cargo upon the pitchy deck.

Dazed by treatment I had never sustained before, I stood heedless as the ropes were unfastened beneath my arm-pits, my hands slipped off and the gag extracted from my aching jaws. I was just beginning to take in the aspect of my surroundings when Corliss's cask of a body topped the bulwarks, swung with ludicrous unconcern for an instant as I dare say mine had done, and then lurched in and crashed to the deck. The Dutchman was purple in the face, with white spots dotting the congested area of his cheeks, and gasping for breath. His stomach heaved tumultuously as the gag was removed.

"What ails you, Peter?" I cried.

"Der water," he moaned. "It makes me sick."

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH
Rev. B. C. Mattson, Pastor

Morning service at 10:30 o'clock. The pastor will preach a sermon for the Lenten season on "Earthly Things and Heavenly Things," an attempt to bring real religion into every day life. Every one owes it to himself to think honestly on these things. Make every Sunday in Lent a go to church Sunday.

The Sunday school is at 12:00 o'clock.

Young People's meeting at 6 o'clock.

Evening service at 7:00 o'clock with sermon on "A Great Saying and Its Truth for Today."

The monthly Fellowship supper occurs at the church at 6:00 p. m. Thursday, March 4th, preceded by the pastor's cabinet meeting at 5:00. The supper will be in charge of the Mary Brewster Circle, who will also present a program of interest following the supper, after which the choir rehearsal will be conducted.

Recent matters of interest have been the delightful sleigh ride for the Christian Endeavor Society Monday night and a fine supper and social time arranged at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Emmet Coulter.

HAVE YOU URIC ACID TROUBLE?

Many Charlevoix Folks Are Learning How to Avoid It

Are you lame and achy; tortured with backache, and rheumatic pains? Feel nervous, depressed, and all-played-out? Then look to your kidneys! When the kidneys weaken uric acid accumulates, poisoning blood and nerves, and many mysterious aches and ills result. Help your kidneys with a stimulant diuretic. Use Doan's Pills! Your friends and neighbors recommend Doan's.

John Stephens, 209 W. Upright Ave., Charlevoix, says: "My kidneys were weak and acted too frequently, often causing me to get up several times during the night to pass the secretions. The passages of the secretions burned a great deal. Doan's Pills relieved the trouble and made me feel better in every way."

Dead Zoo

Mollie's mother took her to the Natural museum one wet afternoon, and Mollie, who had never seen stuffed animals before, was very interested in all she saw.

Presently, however, she grew tired of looking at lifeless creatures that neither moved nor made any noise, and began to get fidgety.

"Aren't you enjoying it, dear?" asked her mother.

"Oh, yes, I like it very much, but after all, mamma, it's only a dead zoo, isn't it?"

WHAT IS THIS GULF WATERWAY

600-foot ginnts that carry 13,000 tons at a single lond, and the smaller boats of 570, 460, 370, and 280 feet length, are commonly of 19-foot druft. All are affected by the lowering of levels.

Bonts in the constwise trade and tramp freighters feel the effects of low water here and there. For instance at Charlevoix this past summer, the regular passenger boats had trouble entering the hnrbor and so did boats carrying iron ore up Pine lake to the mill at Enst Jordan.

Damage to Resort Property

Engineer Richmond in his report was inclined to pass over as insignificent the damage done to shore interests by receding waters, because the coast line was so sparsely settled. But with the recreational boom that has come to Michigan, shore property has attained a largely increased value, which is lessened where the wnters hnve receded far from the shore, as in Saginaw bay, and on many inland lakes connecting with Lake Michignn. The low water damage in this connection is now very large. It should be remembered, too, that since 1918, when Mr. Richmond made his ohservations the main level of Lakes Michigan and Huron has fallen 3.11 feet, exposing many square miles of shallows thnt then were under water navigable by smnll craft.

In fnirness, all such dnmage must be estimnted on the bnsis of the last six inches, if it is to be charged against the diversion at Chicago.

While the lakes are suffering from lack of water, Illnois valley farmers suffer from too much water.

The Illnois river runs in a deep wide trough necross the prairie lands. An observer flying over it in an airplane would see it as a great gash in the earth. The traveler in the valley would see it as flats bordering the river, with high bluffs on either side.

In the Rich Bottoms

These flats are low. Once they were swamps and mud holes and small lakes and bayous with here and there patches of more or less solid ground. In low water stages, the strenm followed a well defined chnnel through them. In high water stages, it used to sprawl all over them, spreading sometimes to the limits of the valley, which below La Salle is from n mile and a half to nine miles across.

Great areas of these flats have been reclaimed by so-called drainage districts—orgnnizations made up of farmers and capitalists. The drainage district have built levées to hold the river within its banks. They hnve dug ditches through the bottoms, dmining the lnkes and morasses. They hnve established pumping plnnts to pump the water from the ditches into the river above.

These reclaimed lands are rich. They grow 14-foot corn, 85 bushels to the nere. Once they had no buyers nt $5 an acre. Now they ure held at $250 nnd $300 an acre. Experiments are being made in growing rice. The Joy Morton plnntation, located where was Thompson lake, n famous duck grounds, reaped its first crop of rice this past fall. Of 300,000 acres between Peoria and the Mississippi subject to overflow, 190,000 acres have been shut in with levees.

Drowning and Poisoning

Owners of these bottom plantations have suffered from the water diverted from Lake Michigan. In flood times the wnter has poured over the tops of the levees or broken the banks.

"You are drowniog us nnd you are poisoning us," they have protested to the Chicago Sanitary district.

Out of these overflows and those which have taken place in years past destroying open tillable fields and wood lots, have arisen hundreds of damage clnims.

Army of Lawyers

The Sanitary district has fought these claims. And it has made them the means of organizing a powerful and efficient political machine. It has employed an army of lawyers. It has placed upon its payroll "legitimately" many an attorney who might be useful in playing its politics, in the legislature, in congress, in steering local public opinion.

The army of attorneys have stalled damage cases along for years and years. Thus they have perpetuated their own jogs. Thus they have kept the political machine functioning. Thus they hnve starved out the dnmaged farmers. Thus they have settled for $900,000 claims aggregating $4.000,000.

Claims are still pending for $3,500,000. These, however, promise to be settled in the immediate future and on a basis of justice rather than by bullying power. The wearing out methods of the Sanitary district hecame such a scandal in the state thnt the last Illinois legislature created a special commission to hear the damage claims and adjudicate them at once. This commission is now holding sessions along the river.

Antagonism is Aroused

The tactics of the Sanitary district lawyers naturally aroused antagonism. This has manifested itself in decided opposition to the 10,000 c. f. s. diversion. Congressman W. E. Hull of Peoria, sponsor in congress for the "needed for navigation" cause, enme mighty near being beaten in the last primary on this very issue.

But even in this flooding out of valley farms the Sanitary district has its side of the case. It is not wholly to blame, even if it is pouring into the vnlley in flood times 10,000 c. f. s. or more wnter thnt doesn't naturally belong there.

Its engineers and other engineers, too, polnt to the levees erected by the drainnge districts themselves as a contributing cause. These levees aim to hold the river within bank 900 to 1,200 feet apart where it has been accustomed to spreading out anywhere from one to nine miles. No wonder the penned up water sometimes rages high.

Higher and stronger levees, the engineers say, will help to withstand the diversion-swelled flood, and prevent future damage.

But how about the damage done to the great lakes by the unnatural taking of their waters. How can this injury be repaired? How can lnke levels be restored?

Thnt will be the subject of the next articles in this series.

to exceed $4,200,000 for highway sinking fuod and interest purposes. There was necessury to meet sinking fund demands and interest for the year 1925, 4,018,379.62 which amount was turned over to me by the accounting division on March 4, 1925.

"A published report says Hoyt Woodman, deputy state treasurer, stated that $1,769,742.12 is to be transferred to the sinking fund in March for investment in bonds. This statement is incorrect as there will be transferred on March 1, the sum of $4,082,059.78, of which $1,933,422.28 will be available for investment, and the balance to pay interest until March 1, 1927. On Mareh I, there will be invested in seeurities belonging to the sinking funds, these sums:

Highway bond sinking fund	6,247,877.92
Soldier bonus sinking fund	4,843,609.49
Total	$12,232,957.87

"In addition to this amount, there will be on hand in the several sinking funds $4,001.137.50 for interest to March 1, 1927."

Pass Normal Bill

Rep. Dexter's Central Michigan Normal school bill asking an appropriation of $750,000 was passed by the house without a comment.

The house, after fiery debate, passed the three criminal code bills and sent them to the senate. This debate brought from Rep. Holland, Gogebie, an arraignment of the prohibition law. Rep. McClain, Quincy, it brought one of the most learned lectures on crime and remedial measures ever heard in the house.

The joint resolution requesting the governor to send another special message to the assembly to remedy ahout a dozen local situations in the state came back to the house for concurrence in senate amendments. It went back. The Atwood highway bill seeking increased highway trunk line maintennnce is expected out of committee the middle of this week and this measure also will precipitate hot clashes.

The session will go the full 20 days and the prospects for lively hours of further debnte is exceptionally good.

BAPTIST CHURCH

The pastor has moved to 102 Hurlbut, just west of Bridge St.

In the evening discourse last Sunday evening the pastor gave the following reasons for lenn Christians, based on the words of Paul in I. Cor. 3:2 and I. Pet. 2:2.

1. They own bibles but feed on newspapers.
2. They sing about peace but will not surrender to get it.
3. They pray that the kingdom of heaven may come, and block the way by worldly living.
4. They listen to sermons on unselfishness, but pamper themselves in food and dress.
5. They wear crosses, but shrink from bearing them.
6. They praise Christ with their lips, hut declare the things He did would be wholly impractical now.

Are these statements true?

AT THE MOVIES

"The Man Who Found Himself"

About five yeurs ago Booth Tarkington, world-famous novelist, was induced by Paramount to have one of his books transferred to the screen. The result of that experiment was one of that season's finest pictures, "The Conquest of Canaan."

The star of the picture was Thomas Meighan who comes to the screen nt the Palace Theatre on Thursdny, March 4, in another story by the same nuthor, "The Man Who Found Himself," another prison tale written especinlly for the "good luck" stnr by Mr. Tnrkington. Alfred E. Green, who directed Meighan in "The Bachelor Dnddy," "Back Home and Broke," "Pied Piper Malone" and other just as successful pictures, made this one. Tom Geraghty, who supervises all of the star's productions, wrote the screen play. Virginia Valli, Frank Morgan, John Harrington, Norman Trevor, Charles Stevenson, Julia Hoyt and Lynn Fontanne are but a few of the big names which appear in the strong supporting east.

Edmund Lowe, the dashing, romantic Ricardo Madons of Fox Films production "The Palnce of Pleasure," coming to the Palace Theatre, Saturday and Sunday, Mareh 6 and 7, put in a restless day at the the studios during the making of the picture. He was dodging imaginary detectives and nnybody who has ever doge imaginary detectives knows what a nerve racking experience it was. Therefore, Mr. Lowe was restless, very restless.

In the cast of The "Palace of Pleasure," besides Mr. Lowe and Miss Compson, are Henry Kolker, George Seigmann, Nina Romano, Harvey Clark, Jacques Rollens, Francis McDonald and Sammy Blum. The picture was directed by Emmett Flynn.

Raymond Griffith is the most "different" person in the world and by nll odds one of the most remarkable persons in Hollywood—and that means something.

In his newest starring comedy, which bears the startling title, "Hnnds Up!" he plays the role of a rollicking, carefree young aide to General Robert E. Lee who gets into and out of one exciting situation after another. At the Palace Theatre, Wednesday, March 10.

Solution will appear in next issue

His Word is His Bond!

A "personal guarantee" means very little to you unless you know the man who makes it.

Ninety per cent of the things bought for your home are selected by the lady member of the firm. She is the purchasing agent. Most men admit that she is a capable buyer, and the reason is this: She must be shown—convinced by proof—that an article is what she needs and is worth the price!

For that reason, she sees the advantage of dealing with a local merchant—a man whose "personal guarantee of satisfaction" means just what it says.

She knows that what he advertises in this paper is entitled to her consideration. Because she has confidence in her neighbor—the local dealer—she can safely invest the family funds in what he guarantees.

NEW SYSTEM OF SELLING

HUDSON-ESSEX ADOPTS "AT YOUR DOOR" PLAN

Believes That Customer Prefer Complete Cost of Car Over Old Plan of Selling

Hudson-Essex is backing its a. y. d. or 'a't your door" system of selling cars with the greatest six-cylinder prodaction in automobile history, according to word received from the company by H. R. Fowler, local dealer.

So confident is the Hudson organization of public approval in its move—which abandons the practice of f. o. b. Detroit prices and begins the quotation of actual delivered prices to the buyer—that it has stepped its volume up to 1300 six cylinder cars a day. This is to be increased at once to 1700 daily, and then to higher figures. This is a figure, says Mr. Fowler which never before has been even approached in the six cylinder field.

"In the week since our announcement of this revolutionary new plan," declares Mr. Fowler, "the motoring public has told us in no uncertain terms that it is for us. The buyers appreciate that they can read one of our quoted prices and know that it is the actual price they will have to pay for a car delivered at their home, with freight, tax and equipment all included.

"Students of the motor car business have often predicted this important change. The public has always been for it. But 'f. o. b. Detroit' was a custom built up through 25 years, and naturally was difficult to overturn. A Gordian knot of tradition grew up around it. Now Hudson-Essex distributors and dealers, with one blow have cut that knot, and brought about the improvement so often predicted.

"We consider this move in the light of a modern business practice. It is in line with the manner in which all other merchandise is sold. One-price-to-all and that-price-plainly-stated are the very basic factors in modern business.

"In the past few years, Hudson-Essex has made repeated moves to put its cars in the hands of buyers on the best possible terms. That one undeviating policy has made Hudson-Essex the largest builder of sixes. Now comes the most important step in that whole plan—a plan which makes prices so easy and simple to understand that confusion is all but impossible. "Watch a. y. d. displace f. o. b."

From now on, all Hudson-Essex dealers will quote prices in their advertisement which are the full and actual price at which a car, equipped, will be delivered to a buyer at his home. The day of a long list of 'extras' is in the discard, so far as these organizations are concerned.

The question naw is, will a. y. d. —meaning at your door displace f. o. b. generally?

The St. Mary's Altar Society will give a St. Patrick's Day supper at the Charlevoix Hotel, Wednesdny evening, March 17. The public is cordially invited.—Adv. 8t3.

DAIRY

IMMATURE CORN IS GOOD FOR SILOING

Weather conditions such as hail, drought, or frost sometimes prevent corn from reaching maturity. Under such circumstances the crop should be siloed, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. Such corn should, if possible, be siloed with some that is mature. Silage from immature corn is sourer and more laxative than that from the mature crop. However, if proper care is exercised in feeding such silage, no ill effects should result.

If frosted corn is cut promptly, the sinks may contain enough water so that it may be siloed without the addition of water. If the corn has become too dry to pack well, considerable water will have to be added when siloing. The frosting of corn causes only a small loss in feeding value, the greatest loss being occasioned by the falling off of leaves in handling and the possible spoiling of part of the silage owing to its failure to pack and keep properly.

Sometimes there is a delay in filling the silo, and it is necessary to cut and shock the corn. Then again on other farms the silo capacity will not take care of the entire crop at one filling. This surplus corn has to be shocked and is available for refilling the silo later on. Such dry corn fodder may be siloed successfully, but it is necessary to wet it thoroughly so that it will pack well in the silo. Water may be added by allowing a stream from a hose to flow into the blower while filling. The surface of the cut material should also be sprinkled as it is distributed in the silo. Corn fodder silage is less palatable and of somewhat lower value than corn siloed under the usual conditions. Owing to the large quantity of water required, siloing corn fodder is advisable only on farms having a water system.

Water Supply for Dairy Cows of Big Importance

The milch cow, of all animals, requires an abundance of pure water. Water constitutes more than three-fourths of the raw material used by the cow in the manufacture of milk. Stale or impure water is so distasteful to her that she will not drink a sufficient quantity for maximum milk production. Furthermore impure water may impair the health of the cow. The water supply, therefore, demands the dairyman's most careful attention. During the winter, when cows are stalled the greater part of the time, it is important that they be watered at least two or three times a day unless water is kept before them constantly. It is advisable to supply water to cows at a uniform temperature, preferably 15 to 20 degrees above the freezing point. When water stands in a tank on which ice often forms, it usually pays well to warm it slightly. This can be done by a tank heater, by live steam, or by hot water from a boiler. If a boiler is used for running a separator or for heating water to wash and sterilize utensils, steam from it can readily and cheaply be used to warm the water.

Barley Is Nearly Equal to Corn for Dairy Cows

Barley is a good feed for dairy cows and nearly equal to corn. Some feeders hold it is quite equal to corn if it does not constitute more than 80 per cent of the meal portion of the ration. Corn is a very good feed. It is low in lime, a little heavy, and for this reason should be lightened with some feed like bran and fed with some legume hay like clover or alfalfa for the purpose of supplying an adequate quantity of mineral substance. Bran is a good feed to use with either barley or corn, or both, because it is bulky, has a slight laxative effect, and lightens the mixture. It lacks lime but it is rich in phosphorus.

Dairy Hints

Cream and milk cool 23 times as fast in water as in air of the same temperature.

Charcoal is recommended as an absorber of foul odors in the milk room. It should be freshly powdered.

For heavy milk production, or for fattening young growing animals, the feeding of grain on pasture is doubtless the most economical method.

A hooded or small-top milk pail protects the milk from dust and dirt falling from the body of the cow, and makes possible the production of a much cleaner milk.

No one wants to produce milk from a sick cow, nor subject the rest of his herd to infection from such a source.

Alfalfa hay is at the top of the list of roughages for the dairy cow, because of its high protein content and its palatability.

• • •

Cows should be groomed daily with a curry comb and brush to keep them in better physical condition and to protect the milk from dirt, loose hair, etc.

ANTRIM STREAMS OPEN TO FISHERMEN

Plenty of Good Water Left Open to Sportsmen

Trout streams to be open to fishermen in both Charlevoix and adjacent counties have come under considerable discussion during the past week or so. Everyone has been wondering if his favorite stream would be closed, thus depriving him of the pleausure of creeping up to the well known deep hole and picking out a big one or two. A list of Charlevoix county's open streams was published in these columns two weeks ago. Below are the open streams in Antrim county:

Cedar river as it runs through Kearney (starting at and including the municipal dam at Bellaire), Custer and Chestonia, T. 29, 30, R. 6, 7 W., to a point between sections 31 and 32, Chestonia road line (the Twin Bridges.)

Green river as it runs thru Chestonin township, T 30 north of R. 6 West; Chestonia township.

Jordan river as it runs thru Echo, Jordan, Chestonia and Warner township, T. 30 and 31, North, R. 5, and 6, 7 West, to a point at the west line of Section 28, Warner township.

Cold Creek in Custer township, T. 29, R. 7 West.

Intermediate (main) river as it runs thru Echo, Banks, Central Lake and between Forest Home and Kearney townships, in T. 30, 31, 32 N., R. 7, 8, 9, West.

Orr Creek in Banks township, T. 32, R. 8, 9, West.

Elk river, connecting Elk Lake and east Grand Traverse Bay at Elk Rapids.

The Literary and Sewing Club of the M. E. church will give an entertainment in the church, Friday evening, March 12. Price 20c and 35c. —Adv. 9t1.

MARCH 10

Our Fiftieth Birthday!

And an invitation to Inspect the Wonders of Your Telephone Exchange

Fifty years ago, on March 10th, for the first time in the history of the country, was the human voice transmitted by means of electrical impulses.

Fifty years ago, over a single wire and a "peculiar contraption" Alexander Bell carried on this first conversation, and his first words "Come here" still echo throughout the world.

The world marvelled at this phenomenal invention, for it was then that was born our telephone system of today.

The strides that this service has made from so humble a beginning are far greater than is ordinarily conceived. From two telephones connected with a single wire it has grown into millions of telephones, with a network of wires running into central distributing exchanges connecting the whole land into one great community.

Today, your neighbor is only as far as your telephone. He may be only a stonethrow away, or he may be in a far off city, yet your telephone brings him at arms length. Day or night, whenever you please, your telephone places you in communication with loved ones, friends or business associates.

In our own state, the Michigan Bell Telephone System has more than half a million telephones, connecting with 125,000 telephones of other companies in Michigan and 16,000,000 telephones in the country. More than three million calls per day are completed in Michigan. Many men and women are employed constantly to give quick and efficient telephone communication. That has been the growth of your telephone service.

OPEN HOUSE

Wednesday, March 10th

On Wednesday, March 10th, we cordially invite you to take a trip behind the scenes, to inspect the wonders of your telephone exchange. We know it will prove a revelation to you.

BOAT CLUB BEING ORGANIZED

TWENTY-FOUR APPLICATIONS RECEIVED TO DATE

Summer Visitors Meet Proposition With High Praise and Promises of Cooperation

At the last meeting of the Charlevoix Association of Commerce the question of organizing a boat club in Charlevoix was brought up. As will be gathered by the following, the matter has met with general approval and the spirit of enthusiasm and hearty support expressed in the many answers to the circular letter sent out, certainly is encouraging to Mr. and Mrs. M. Roy Brady, who are sponsoring the move.

Twenty-four pledges to membership in the new club have been received to date from Charlevoix summer visitors, and, without an exception, all voice their approval of the project and promise their moral and financial aid in carrying the proposition through, one even enclosing check for dues. Following are a few paragraphs from some of the answers:

William M. Cahn, Chicago—"Please enter my name for membership and if you wish me talk to some of the other men who spend their summers in Charlevoix I will be very glad to do so."

Jas. J. Reis, Cincinnati—"I not only heartily approve of the idea, but gladly enroll myself as a member for whatever amount the dues may be, and will gladly send you my check as soon as I am called upon."

Alvin D. Goldman, St. Louis, Mo.—"I will say in reply that I will be glad to pledge myself to become a member of the boat club. You know I am always willing to do what I can to help Charlevoix, and anything to do with Charlevoix, so whatever happens you can count me in if I am wanted."

J. W. Keiler, Los Angeles, Calif.—"By all means put me down."

James B. Balch, Kalamazoo, Mich—"I am for anything that will add to the moral and physical pleasure of the guests and the citizens of Charlevoix. To me, Charlevoix has great prospects and if you citizens all pull together, act wisely and take advantage of your location and climatic conditions, then there will be nothing to stop your progress."

Others who have pledged themselves to join the club include Karl Keifer, Cincinnati, O.; Walter H. Pritz, Cincinnati, O; Louis Ullman; Geo. C. Shaw, Nashville, Tenn.; Fred Lazarus, Jr., Columbus, O.; Irving N. Klein, Chicago; Leo. F. Keiler, Paducah, Ky.; Sam Gilbert, Detroit; Charles Rice, St. Louis, Mo.; Ira L. Holden, Cincinnati, O.; E. J. Block, Indiana Harbor, Ind.; E. F. Cooley, Lansing, Mich.; S. I. Karger, Chicago; Geo. Tramel, Chicago; Hudson Burr, Bloomington Ill., H. R. House, Cincinnati, O.; J. R. Wineman, Chicago; J. Moses, Chicago.

As soon as the necessary thirty members are pledged, it is planned that the Association of Commerce shall appoint a temporary, or acting secretary and treasurer, who will collect dues, acknowledging same with a membership card, and keep accurate records which will be turned over to the regular officers as soon as they are elected. When there are thirty paid members a complete list will be sent to each one and each will then vote, by mail, on the ones they would prefer to act as officers for the year of 1926. Other questions that will need to be voted on can be left until after the election of officers. It will also be up to them to plan meetings, etc.

Charlevoix citizens have not been called upon for the pledges to membership as yet, but will be in a short time. It is the duty of every business man on the street to give their hearty support to the project and see it through to a successful conclusion. Benefits from such an organization are unlimited and depend upon support given it. With local members and those still to be heard from outside, there is no reason why the club should not be started with at least fifty members. It means a big thing Let's all get behind it.

Granted Life Certificates

Central Michigan Normal will graduate 61 on various courses at the winter term commencement, March 25. Among those living in Charlevoix county who are listed as graduates are:

Maude Starmer, Bay Shore, general life certificate; Edith Snenthen, Boyne City, general life certificate; Josie Hammond and Virginia Pray, East Jordan, both general life certificates.

OFFICIALS DRAW FOR TOURNAMENT

DISTRICT MEET LINE-UP DECIDED SATURDAY NIGHT

Finals, Semi-Finals and Consolation to Be Run Off Near the Week End.

Drawing for the schedule of games at the district interscholastic basket ball tournament to be held this week Friday and Saturday at Harbor Springs was publicly effected last Saturday night at the high school gymnasium in Petoskey by Athletic Manager Arthur Treloar and Principal Harold S. Bates, just preceding the Petoskey-Traverso game.

The schedule as it stands at present is as follows:

Class D: Bellaire and St. Ignace, 7:30 to 8:30 p. m., Thursday. Mackinaw City and Central Lake, 8:30 to 9:30 p. m., Thursday. Pellston and Ellsworth, 8:00 to 9:00 a. m., Friday. Alanson and Alba, 9:00 to 10:30 a. m., Friday. Boyne Falls is bye team in this class, but the winner of the Bellaire-St. Ignace game will play them Friday afternoon from 1:00 to 2:00 o'clock. The second round in Class D for the semi-finals will be played Friday evening, 8:00 to 0:00 o'clock, and the finals will be played Saturday evening from 8:00 to 9:00 o'clock. The consolations in this class will be played Saturday morning and afternoon. The game for third place in Class D will also he played Saturday afternoon.

Class C: Boyne City and Harbor Springs, 9:30 to 10:30 p. m., Thursday. Charlevoix and East Jordan, 10:00 to 11:00 a. m., Friday. The winners of the Boyne City-Harbor and Charlevoix-East Jordan games will redraw with Mancelona, the bye team in this class, playing Friday night from 9:30 to 10:00 o'clock. The final games in this class will be played Saturday morning from 9:00 to 10:00 o'clock.

Crane, of Grand Rapids, and MacMillan, of Petoskey, will referee the district tournament games, all to be held at Harbor Springs.

DORIS SOLOMON ENTERTAINS GIRL FRIENDS

Fifteen Young Ladies Helped Her Colebrate Birthday.

Miss Doria Solomon entertained 15 of her girls friends last Thuraday evening at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. A. Solomon, the occasion being her 14th birthday anniversary.

The house was prettily trimmed with red crepe paper and the delicious luncheon was featured by a huge birthday cake adorned with 14 red candles. The young ladies thoroughly enjoyed an evening of games and wished their hostess many more such occasions.

Those present were the Misses Arelyne Supernaw, Clara Kelderhouse, Helen Smith, Annie Tuhy, Fern Crandall, Audrey Staley, Bonita Higman, Dorothy Beardsley, Lela Wooloy, Morella Oldham, Angie Scott, Mary Simmons, Virginia Wooley, Alice Partridge and Roberta Stafford.

SNOW REMOVAL COST AMPLY JUSTIFIED RESULTS

In partial justification of the money which the state is spending on snow removal in the northern part of the state, in the Mancelona Herald for Thursday, February 25, appears the following:

"Yesterday, the Mancelona (rotary snow plow) crew went out of their way to clear a road to Robert Kitchen's barn, north of Alba, to allow him to get his car out to bring Miss Beulah Bocock to Mancelona to have her burns attended to—burns incurred the evening before in a futile attempt to save her mother from being burned to death. And on this night before, the fact that the road was open for cars, saved an hour and a half in getting a doctor to the scene of the tragedy, to relieve in a measure the suffering of the stricken woman."

COMMUNITY THEATER IS PLANNED

HALF OF NECESSARY STOCK IS SUBSCRIBED

Structure To Be Arcade Style, Located on Ayres Boal Property on Bridge St.

If plans now under way materialize and the necessary amount of stock is subscribed, Charlevoix will have a new $75,000 theatre before the end of the coming summer.

The proposed theatre will be located on the Stockman property, corner Bridge and Clinton streets, comprising the stores now occupied by A. E. Mnson, Mrs. J. T. Oldham and Geo. Lusk. Plans call for a building done in Spanish architecture, built in the arcade style, with two stores lifty feet in length on each side of the entrance. The structure will be of brick and tile construction. The theater itself will be up-to-the-minute in every detail and equipped with a pipe organ, stage for vaudeville performances, have n seating capacity of from 1,000 to 1250 including balcony, seats to be of the twenty-inch type and comfortably upholstered. Accommodations for conventions of most any size will be afforded with such a seating capacity.

Ayres Boal, present owner of the property, has agreed to turn his holdings into stock in the new theatre for $18,000, land involved to include n 66-foot frontage on Bridge street back to Round lake, or for the sum of $15,000 and retain a strip on the lake to allow him to build a dock, with the agreement that he will improve and benutify the shore line. We understand that if an additional thirty thousand dollars in stock is sold, half of which has already been subscribed, the deal without question will go through.

Chas. H. Emrey, who is chairman of the committee handling the proposition, states that one more week has been allowed to put the proposition across. Therefore, it is necessary that local citizens desiring stock should get on the job and help put the deal over, as it is the desire of the committee to have the stock owned locally.

CAR FERRY HAS LITTLE TROUBLE

Ice Conditions Much Better Than in Former Years.

The ice conditions in the Straits between Mackinaw City and St. Ignace this winter are the best that they have been for years.

There is no piling up in windrows to interfere with the passage of the carferry chief Wawatam, which is able to maintain her regular channel through the fourteen inches of ice which is usually from 22 to 24 inches thick and some winters even heavier. The usual time occupied by the boat in making the crossing is forty minutes but this winter it takes about one hour and twenty minutes on account of the slush ice and snow in the channel, more especially in turning around.

The prospects are that when the ice begins to move this spring it will go with a rush. Owing to the low stage of water in the lakes there is little current in the Straits this winter. At the Cheboygan end of the Straits, where regular communications are maintained with Bois Blanc island, a large area of the ice is flooded owing to air holes.

WHAT IS THIS GULF WATERWAY

ILLINOIS PLAN OF BIG CONERN TO ALL MICHIGAN

Lowering of Lakes Level By Chicago Drainage Canal Covered in Series of Articles

No. 10.

(By Arthur W. Stace.)

Lakes Michigan and Huron are right now in January, 1926, at the lowest level they ever have been in all recorded history.

The December stage was 2.05 feet below the low-water datum on which all federal harbor and channel improvements are based. It was 4.4 feet below the peak of July, 1918, since when there has been a steady decline, broken only temporarily by the usual summer rises.

January levels are lower than those of December, February can be expected to be lower than January. Then the lakes are due to begin their annual seasonable rise lasting until July or August. Whether that seasonable rise will be the beginning of a real "comeback" or whether lake levels are due for a still further plunge into unprecedented depths will be determined by Father Time in the course of the next eight months.

Another Drop Last Year

This past year there wasn't even the start of a "comeback." The usual summer rise, which ordinarily amounts to a foot or more, was around four or five inches, the smallest since 1895.

The mean level of the two lakes in 1925 was 1.37 feet below low water datum. In 1918, when the present decline began, the mean level was 1.74 above datum. That is a fall in mean levels of 3.11 feet in seven years.

No wonder shore folks are beginning to ask in awesome tones "has the bottom dropped out of the lakes?"

No wonder the old legend of an underground river secretly druining the lakes is again whispered.

No wonder folks are speculating on the inaccurate but fascinating myth of "seven years up and seven years down"—the mysterious cycle that is supposed to govern the rise and fall of lake levels, but which doesn't prove up on the lake survey hydrographic charts.

No wonder the Chicago drainage canal, the largest visible purloiner of lake water, is coming in for a lot of vigorous damning that lake interests would like to translate into damming.

Series of Reservoirs

Something has gone materially wrong with our lakes. What is it?

In trying to answer that let's first soar aloft and get a comprehensive airplane view of the great lakes region. Here we see the lakes as a series of huge reserviors ranged in steps one above the other. Each reservoir is surrounded by a drainage area which pours water into it.

Up at the top is Lake Superior, 602.26 feet above sea level. Twenty one feet below are Lakes Huron and Michigan. Siamese twins connected by the Straits of Mackinac, both with practically the same mean level, 579.6 feet above the sea. Seven feet one inch farther down is Lake Erie at 572.44 above sea level. At the bottom of the chain is Lake Ontario by means of Niagara river and the falls. And Lake Ontario spills into the St. Lawrence, which carries the great lakes water to the sea.

In their original state all these reservoirs were guarded against depletion by natural dams at their outlets. They could pour out just so much water and no more. At the outlet of Lake Superior were three shoals and the falls and rapids of St. Mary's river. The least depth above the shoals was 5 to 17 feet at mean low water.

At the foot of Lake Huron outside the entrance of St. Clair river were broad sand shoals with a minimum of depths of 16 to 18 feet. There were shoals, too, in St. Clair river at Port Huron, and very serious bars in St. Clair lake, where the depth was two to six feet in low water. Detroit river had a rock dam, the noted Lime Kiln Crossing, where the normal depth was 12½ to 15 feet. At the foot of Lake Erie were the shoals and reefs in Niagara river, with a minimum depth of 13 feet between Tonawanda and Lake Erie and of 9 feet between Tonawanda and Niagara Falls.

Natural Dams in Lakes

These dams checked the outflow from the various lakes, regulating it naturally according to the inflow. They helped maintain the lake levels when the inflow, because of lack of rainfall or snowfall, became less than

NEXT NUMBER LYCEUM COURSE

JACK WOOD'S MALE QUARTETTE AND BELL RINGERS

Present Entertaining Program of Bell Ringing, Vocal and Instrumental Numbers

In connection with the appearance here on the Lyceum course, on Thursday evening, March 18th, of Jack Wood's Male Quartette and Bell Ringers, it is interesting to know that the art of bell ringing was revealed to America first in the 1840's by the late P. T. Barnum.

While touring England he heard a group of church bell ringers practising upon hand bells, and he conceived the idea of using a larger peal of bells and playing more elaborate music.

The Bells for the Barnum bellringers were made in England, as the world's best bells always have been, but in conformity with the showman's unfailing originality as an advertiser, he dressed the players, both men and women, in the costumes of Swiss peasants, and called them Swiss Bell Ringers. For many years this company toured the United States in wagons before railroads were at all general. The art at that time was so successful that our grandfathers recall most vividly the visit of the Swiss Bell Ringers to their native towns.

Jack Wood's Male Quartette and Bell Ringers preserve the best traditions of bell ringing and present a program in which selections played on the bells are not a notable fenture.

Vocal selections and instrumental numbers employing violin, cello, banjo and piano all find a place on the varied programs of this really notable company.

ARTHUR JOSEPH RESIDENCE SCENE OF FIRE

Damage From Smoke Will Amount to Around $1,000

Damage to the extent of around $1,000 resulted from a fire at the Arthur Joseph residence, 301 Michigan avenue, last Friday evening at about 9 o'clock.

Origin of the blaze is undetermined but supposedly started from defective wiring or spontaneous combustion in a bunch of old paint rags. The house had just been newly redecorated in the interior, although painters had not been working there for three or four days previous to the fire. Most of the damage was caused from smoke and the whole inside will have to be repainted along with other repairs.

"Neighbors"—Friday Evening

A clever, amusing play, "The Neighbors," by Zena Glao, will be given by the Literary and Sewing Club in the M. E. church on Friday evening of this week, March 12th. The play is full of chuckles. Come and enjoy it. The play will be preceded by a fine musical program by the town's best musical talent. All for 20c and 35c.—10t1.

The Rebekahs will serve supper to the public at the I. O. O. F. Temple, Friday, March 12, from 5:30 until all are served. Price 50c per plate. Adv. 10t1.

SCORES OF NEW LAWS ENACTED

SPECIAL SESSION CLOSED ON FRIDAY LAST

State's Seventeenth Special Session in 89 Years is Groesbeck's Fifth Call

(By Ed. A. Nowack)

The 17th special session of a Michigan legislature during our 89 years of statehood came to a close last Friday night under the irksome provisions of a "call of the house," that drastic measure infrequently employed to return missing members to vote under stress of parliamentary labors. It was the fifth special session of the Groesbeck regime. The call of the house, that pulled three representatives from bed, also alienated 11 former administration votes on the Okemos women's prison bill which resulted in the defeat of that measure and the Atwood-trunk line maintenance bill.

The special session of the 53rd legislature ended in the 18th day of its 20 day limit for which representatives and senators drew $100 plus mileage. The senate did all its work in less than one day's actual working time. The house actually worked about four days. Thirty-three bills were introduced—two being duplications—while 20 were enacted as law. The House passed 14 measures, the Senate six.

Gov. Groesbeck's special session program went through with the exception of the Atwood bill which was smashed to pieces in the conference report the house rejected as the last work it did under the call. Outside of the Grand Trunk bill, the Kirby highway bill, the Central Michigan Normal bill and the Atwood bill, all called for in the original message, the major points in the governor's second message were of minor importance and prepared as a means to pave the way for consideration of about 20 pet measures of legislators who had local irons in the fire.

Much political significance was attached to the special session. Much was said in condemnation of the Groesbeck regime. Equally as much was said commending it. There was no mistaking the fact that members had their ears attuned to the sentiment back home. Consequently, after many of the boys had worked off their oratorical energies as Rep. Howell, Saginaw, jokingly explained, most of the boys voted for the governor's bills. So strong was the governor's support in the house—the heralded seat of the anticipated Groesbeck "denth knell"—that the house in a virtually unprecedented action and by a vote of 67 to 28 expunged from the records—placed there under the inviolable rule of personal privilege—the terrific arraignment of the administration by Rep. R. W. McLain, Quincy.

The assembly met with utter indifference the governor's invitation in his second message to investigate the parole commission and while the House gave the Grand Trunk bill a vote of 90 to 3 approving abrogation of the special charter that for 92 years has enabled that road to escape taxation, the members took the Okemos women's prison bill and walloped the governor to a standstill.

COLDEST PERIOD OF WINTER LAST FRIDAY MORNING

Although not generally known by local people, last Friday morning brought the lowest temperature that Charlevoix and Northern Michigan has experienced this winter. Back from the lake, thermometer readings varied from ten to 18 below. At the Coast Guard station 14 below was reported at 6:00 a. m. At points on the south hill parties reported from 15 to 20 below.

Ellsworth reported 22 below and at Central Lake the thermometer registered from 24 to 28 below.

Petoskey reports 20 below, Mackinaw City, Levering and Mancelona report 22 below and at Boyne Falls and Elmira 26 below.

The weather was somewhat warmer Saturday, but during the night about 6 inches of snow fell. Sunday it snowed off and on all day. Today Charlevoix is experiencing her deepest snow depth of the season.

Cutting Some Fancy Figures

CORRESPONDENCE

BAYSHORE

Mrs. Tripp is very ill at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Dodge, in Bay Shore.

Eight inches of snow fell Saturday night, March 6, and still the "beautiful" falls.

John Gray, Earl Murray and A. Evers went to Charlevoix last Friday to get instructions on the school laws.

Sheriff Novak was obliged to leave his car and call a team to take him home from the George Burns' place last week.

If you don't turn out to caucus on Thursday, March 11, don't complain after it is over. The fellow who is interested will be there.

Cullers on Frank Burnett last Saturday were surprised to find him walking around the house and able to go out to the barn on crutches.

There are two drawbacks in going to caucus this year—but if you can get to the road leading to the town hall in Hayes, you can surely get to the hall.

Clifford Short made the trip to Charlevoix, March 5, going through the fields by the Fairchild farm. He was forced to do some shoveling and was assisted by James O'Brien.

Henry Hair thought he would visit Charlevoix last Wednesday. After a strenuous effort he got as far as the George Burns' farm. It was sad news, but he thanked George for telling him he would have to go back.

(Too late—for last week)

Galo Chew spent the week end at the home of his parents.

Fred Mahy has bought the Joseph Speigle place and will take possession this spring.

Car traffic on the interior roads is impassable until the weather man comes to the rescue.

Gus Troutman was married Friday evening, at his home south of Bayshore. We failed to learn the lady's name.

Clifton Gregory of Charlevoix, visited at the home of Will Gregory, Jr., over the week end.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Send and W. D. Hair were visitors at the court house in Charlevoix last week.

Grant Ferguson, Will Price, Gus Troutman and Arthur Odell have been drawing lumber from Boyne City the past week.

Mrs. Dane Anderson of Detroit, who has been visiting at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. Hair, returned home last Thursday.

Mrs. Maud Keal, who visited her son, Robt. McCellun, at his farm south of Bayshore a few days last week, has returned to her home in Petoskey.

Avoid Poorly-Balanced Breakfasts

Quaker Oats supplies excellent "food balance"

If you feel tired, hungry, "fidgety," hours before lunch, don't jump to the conclusion of poor health. You may have unenergetic mornings because your breakfasts lack certain important food elements.

To feel right, you must have a well-balanced, complete breakfast ration. At most other meals—lunch and dinner—you get it. But breakfast is a hurried meal, often badly chosen.

Thus Quaker Oats, containing 16% protein, foods great tissue builder, 68% carbohydrate, its great energy element, plus all-important vitamines and the "bulk" that makes laxatives seldom needed, is the dietetic urge of the world today.

It is food that "stands by" you through the morning. Quick Quaker cooks in 5 to 5 minutes. That's faster than plain toast. Don't deny yourself the natural stimulation this rich food offers you.

IRONTON

There was no church Sunday on account of the storm and impassible roads.

Mr. Ogden left Wednesday for Charlevoix to spend a few days with his family.

About twenty couple greatly enjoyed the party Saturday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bridenstine.

Mr. Berry has been confined to his home for the past week on account of illness but is much improved at this writing.

The Ladies' Aid met at Mrs. Woodworth's last Wednesday, on account of bad roads and storm only four ladies were present. They will meet this week with Mrs. L. Brown.

NORWOOD

Mrs. I. L. Dice spent the past week in Charlevoix, with the husband, who is in the hospital for an operation.

Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Ypma, Mrs. Clarence Boomstra and the Misses Esther and Mary Parsons, all of Grand Rapids, attended the funeral of Mrs. William Genett last Friday at Norwood.

I. N. Fluckey of Lakeville, Ind., brother of Mrs. I. L. Dice of Norwood, with his family orchestra, broadcasted over the radio on Wednesday night of last week. On the occasion his orchestra played old-time music for a prize contest given by the manager of the Palace Theatre of South Bend, Ind. He orchestra, while playing brought the audience of the great theatre down in great applause, and Mr. Fluckey was afterward presented with a fine violin and ten dollors in gold. Mr. Fluckey, leader of his own orchestra, is now sixty years old and learned to be a violinist in his early childhood days.

EVELINE

Hans Johnson had a hog butchered Saturday.

Peter Nasson's were in East Jordan Saturday.

Peter Anderson spent Sunday home visiting his family.

Everybody are all snowed under now with the deep snow.

R. H. Sherman drove to Charlevoix Monday, to settle up the taxes with the county treasurer.

BARNARD

Mrs. Peter Block spent the week end with relatives in Charlevoix.

No church or Sunday school on account of the weather and road conditions.

We are sorry that our new got so badly mixed up in spelling last week. It was Mr. and Mrs. Burns who attended the W. C. T. U. banquet and Mrs. Lucas Reamsma, who is taking medical treatment in Charlevoix.

About a dozen ladies surprised Mrs. John Walker last Thursday, the occasion being her birthday. A pot-luck dinner was served and everyone had a fine time and all wished Mrs. Walker many more happy birthdays.

Ford

For the First Time $500 Buys a Closed Car

If you plan to spend over $500 F. O. B. Factory for an automobile, you can get the year-round comfort and convenience of a Ford closed car.

The price advantage which the public enjoys in purchasing Ford cars is the result of volume production. In 1920, when the Ford Motor Company was producing approximately only a million cars a year, the Ford Touring Car sold for $575. Today, with production on the basis of nearly two million cars a year, the Tudor Sedan, a high quality all-steel closed car, can be purchased for $520—$55 less than the Touring Car sold for six years ago. Open car prices are correspondingly low.

While this program of price reduction has been carried on, important refinements and improvements have been made in Ford cars. The latest improvements include new and attractive body lines—a lower center of gravity, closed cars in color, all-steel bodies, new brakes and new style fenders.

However, the basic features of Ford design have not been changed. Three point motor suspension, planetary transmission, dual ignition system, torque tube drive, multiple disc-in-oil clutch, splash lubrication, thermo-syphon cooling system—outstanding features of automobile design—have all been retained, regardless of cost.

I heard Bones continuing to shout orders; and there was a constant bustle of men running back and forth over the decks, a clattering of ropes and shrieking of falls and blocks. Forward sounded an ordered trampling of feet and a chorus of voices bellowing the wild sea-song I had heard in the Whale's Head tavern:

Fifteen men on the Dead Man's Chest—
Yo-ho-ho, and a bottle of rum!
Drink and the devil had done for the rest—
Yo-ho-ho, and a bottle of rum!

Corbett, weak as a rag, sank in a heap of buckskin in a dark corner by the bulwarks.

"Neen, neen," he answered when I would have helped him. "No! 'ings, Bob, I get better by and by. Der salt water—it is always so with me."

"I'll get you some rum," I said firmly.

And, rising, I was on the point of seeking the nearest man to ask where a drink might be obtained when footsteps clicked on the deck behind me.

"They are a dangerous company," said a voice with an unmistakable brogue to it.

"What would you?" returned my great-uncle. "We could not employ his majesty's people in such a business. And all things considered, my fellows can handle it far better and more expeditiously."

They passed through the rays of the lanthorn which swung from the mainyard. Aye, the first speaker was Colonel O'Donnell. The little Irish maid! His daughter. My father had been right in his suspicions.

But what could be the tie of interest between a colonel in the army of the king of Spain and an outlaw who had defied the whole structure of civilization? A Jacobite plot? It seemed preposterous!

"'Tis my daughter I was thinking of," explained O'Donnell as they reached the starboard gangway close by where I stood over Peter's prostrate form. "A woman on a pirate ship!"

"My dear sir, Rule Four of the Code of Articles under which our company is governed—does it surprise you that we have our own laws?—forbids the taking and keeping of women as spoil aboard our ships. We have had experience in the past of the evils which flow in the wake of a struggle for women's favors."

"Shall you not flout your own rule if my daughter comes aboard?" pressed the Irishman.

"She will not come as a prisoner, but as a guest," returned Murray blandly. "After all, colonel, the Royal James is my ship—and in that respect differs from most outlaw craft which are held by the entire crew as a community. No, no; you need not concern yourself."

"I like it not, I say!" persisted O'Donnell. "Why did you bid me bring her? You were hot for her coming so soon as you heard I had a daughter."

"Would you have left her by her lone in a strange country?" answered my great-uncle impatiently. "Tut, man, be sensible. Who would suspect a man who had his daughter with him? 'Tis true this enterprise is fraught with danger, but no maid can go through life without sniffing peril. We will guard her as we shall the treasure."

"I'll hold you to that," rapped O'Donnell as he climbed over the bulwarks and felt for the ladder. "I am not proud of myself when I think of her innocence. Holy saints, what a coil! Well, well, no matter. I must be going, for the night wanes."

"Yes," assented Murray. "And stir your frigate's captain to a swift passage."

The Irishman nodded.

"If necessary we'll pass by the Havana. Luckily Porto Bello is the intendente's chief worry. You'll hover, then, off Mona passage?"

"Aye, from the south tip of Hispaniola to the north of Porto Rico, save it storms, when we'll run for shelter in the bay of Samana, where the old buccaneers were wont to lie. Diego can find us. He has done it before. Just give him ample time."

"So soon as the Santissima Trinidad has her orders Diego shall know."

He started to descend and then climbed back.

"She has heavy metal, Murray. Are you certain—"

My great-uncle laughed.

"Be at ease upon that point, chevalier. We could take two Spaniards of the Santissima Trinidad's metal. I fear I must bid you good evening, though. Hark!"

The bell of the Spanish frigate rang out eight times.

"Midnight!" exclaimed O'Donnell. "Can you be gone by dawn?"

"My dear sir," returned my uncle lightly, "this brig will never be seen again—anywhere—by anybody."

"Good night," he said abruptly, and his head vanished behind the bulwarks.

I heard the rattle of oars, a low order in Spanish, the steady splash and spatter of rowers as the boat pulled away. My great-uncle watched it for a moment, then turned toward where I stood.

"Well, Nephew Robert, what did you make of us?" he inquired.

I contrived to keep my voice level, for I would not give him the satisfaction of supposing he had startled me.

"That you are engaged in deeper villainy even than my father feared."

"You have a narrow-minded view of life," he remarked. "However, 'tis a defect can be remedied by experience. By the way, do not jump to conclusions from what you overheard. You shall have the whole tale anon, but until you possess a more intimate knowledge of the situation you are better off in ignorance."

"To me you are a singularly bloody pirate, and that is all."

"The injustice of youth!" he commented evenly. "I was the uncle and tender guardian of the mother you never knew, Robert."

"I share my father's feelings upon that point," I cried, and raised my hand in a threatening gesture.

He did not stir.

"Your conversion will be quite as difficult as I had foreseen," he said. "No, you would gain naught by striking me. Impartially I may recommend you to adopt an attitude which will secure you the maximum of liberty and opportunity. Of what avail for you to force yourself into confinement?"

"Sir," I returned, "be convinced of this: The day you attack a defenseless ship I will slay as many of you as I can and contentedly die."

It has a sound of theatricalism now, but I meant it at the time.

"I purpose nothing of that sort for you," answered my great-uncle. "And while I am tempted to argue you out of a position founded upon a false ethical basis I shall content myself with the observation that you would do well to hold your temper in leash until you find a need for its employment."

He glanced overside.

"I see we are under way. I must ask you to excuse me for the present, Robert. I am constrained to serve as pilot."

He raised his little silver whistle, and its shrill call fetched several of the crew aft.

"Aye, aye, captain," it was Bones. "What's your wish, sir?"

"Have this poor fellow"—Murray gestured toward Corbett's recumbent form—"carried to one of the staterooms. Use him gently. Bid the Irish boy—what's his name? Oh, Darby!—bid Darby tend him and fetch him what he requires.

"This gentleman, here"—he indicated me—"is my great-nephew, Master Bones. It may be he will succeed me in command of the Royal James some day, although he is not with us of his own wish as yet. He is to have complete freedom except he undertake to achieve aught to our disadvantage. Pass the word to the men. If you please."

"That's a queer lay," growled Bones. "Is he friend or enemy, captain?"

"An intelligent question," replied my great-uncle. "We may call him an enemy who is to be treated as nearly as possible as a friend."

"Blasted if I see any sense in it," affirmed Bones. "But whatever you says, captain."

"Exactly," said my great-uncle.

"Stir your stumps, ye lousy swabs," roared Bones to his men. "Hitch on to this here land-while. —— my lights and gizzard if I ever see such a monstrous heap o' human flesh! We'd ought to take him to the South seas and sell him to the cannybals. That's all he's good for. Come on, young gentleman, you may be the captain's nevvy or hy-hlow or whatever 'twas he called ye, but everybody works on this ship. Lend a hand."

I obeyed him in silence, while he and the others cursed and blasphemed with a fluency defying description. What a company! Except in Murray's presence they owned no discipline, accepted no restraint. Palpably they hated us as well as feared him, and I found myself wondering how secure a hold he had upon their passions. Let them once cast off the spell of his magnetism and superior wickedness, and they would become so many irresponsible agents of lust and destruction.

I shuddered and was glad of the hooded cabin-lamp as we stowed Peter's limp body into the constricted space of a bunk; gladder still when they tramped away and left me alone with the Dutchman.

Through a porthole the lights of New York winked farewell to me. I was as frightened as a child by himself for the first time in the dark.

CHAPTER V

Aboard the Brig.

I woke with a ray of sunshine streaming across my face through the thick, greenish glass of a deadlight and an odd feeling of contentment. There was a soothing swi-shish of divided waters; and the brig herself was swaying easily in a following sea.

Corbett was sleeping the sleep of utter exhaustion, and I was at pains not to disturb him as I slipped to the floor, opened the door and entered the main cabin. This was deserted save for the boy Darby, who was curled up on the seat under the stern windows, peering out at the brig's creamy wake. He heard the door close after me and swiveled round at once, landing lightly on his feet as if he had been to sea for years.

"Och, Master Bob," says he, "I thought ye'd never wake up. Ah, it's the grand, grand day. And do ye smell the brine in the air? It makes the tops of your two feet dance, whether ye will or no—troth, it does."

'Twas impossible to nourish resentment against the boy for his betrayal of us. He was as naturally lawless and unmoral as a young wolf, but I could not resist a leer at his recent transformation.

"And how does it seem to be a pirate, Darby?"

"Oh, fine! Sure, I always knew I wasn't intended for a bowsprung to run errands and carry notes. Ah, it's the grand life, Master Bob! They tell me himself—" he jerked his thumb toward the door of a stateroom opposite that in which Peter and I were berthed—"is own uncle to ye, and some day, 'f ye choose, ye can be as great as him. Faith, and I know what my choice would be'"

"Is it your idea that pirates never work?" I inquired.

His face fell a trifle.

"Och, there's work everywhere ye go, bad 'cess to it! But I'm to have my own cutlass and two pistols for my belt, and they say I'm good luck."

"Good luck? How's that?"

"Sure, it's my hair, I think. Flint—him that this crew sail with by usual—he has a liking for a red-headed lad. Such as myself brings him luck, so they swear, and Long John——"

"Who?"

"Long John—M'sior Silver, to be sure—him with the one leg we talked to by the shore yesterday—he says I'll go far with Flint."

I had to laugh at my own bemusement at the picture Darby's remark called up. Yesterday morning at this hour I had been laboring industriously in the counting room in Pearl street. And how much had happened since then! I harked back to my setting forth for the Bristol packet, the casual conversation with the one-legged mariner, how skillfully he had pumped me and annexed Darby to his plot—the encounter with the Irish maid—

With this I carried my recollections. Thought of Moira O'Donnell was unpleasant, for I could not rid my mind of the suspicion that she must be bound up in some way in the schemes her father worked at in cooperation with my great-uncle.

But there! I found relief in this reflection. Certes, her father could be no worse than my relative; and here was I, innocent of any art or part in Murray's devious ploys yet tossed into the grip of their mechanism as ruthlessly as if my life depended upon his success. And perhaps it did. What more natural, then, than that she was equally innocent? Aye, from the conversation betwixt the two conspirators I had overheard the night before it appeared that she was ignorant, precisely in greater ignorance of her father's plans than I, else how explain O'Donnell's concern upon discovering the character of the men with whom she was to be thrown in contact?

And this aroused a further recollection. What was it the lass had said as we parted?

"Here our paths diverge."

She would not have said that had she known all, for there had been no necessity for that. Doubt not, she was in entire ignorance of the [illegible] "parts" I [illegible]

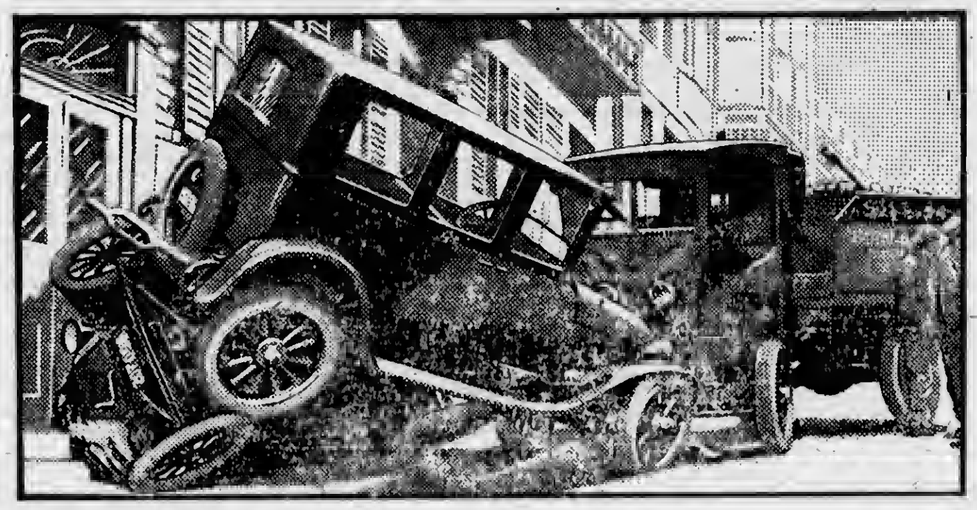
Only STEEL could meet a test like this!



A Dodge Brothers Motor Car . . . A speeding truck racing down hill and out of control . . . A collision . . . .

Take one look at this photograph. It is not pretty, to be sure, but it will convince any sensible man that all steel construction is the only safe construction for a motor car body.

That is why Dodge Brothers introduced the all steel body more than eleven years ago, and this year greatly improved and perfected it.

In fact, Dodge Brothers are convinced that the day is not far off when wooden motor car bodies will be a curiosity. People will shudder at the thought of having ridden in them and will thank Dodge Brothers for the greater safety, durability—and beauty, too—of all steel construction.

A steel body will stand up under impacts that would crush the average body to bits.

Steel cannot splinter. Steel cannot burn. Steel is an armor of protection on the crowded, hurrying highway.

Outwardly, nearly all types of bodies appear to be all steel. In reality, however, most of them are simply frames of wood covered by a metal shell.

Dodge Brothers Motor Car bodies are steel through and through—steel reinforced by steel—buttressed and braced by steel—even the frames and running boards are steel.

And slender, stronger steel corner posts replace the customary bulky posts of wood, affording full, unhampered driving vision on all sides—a safety feature of the first importance!

Travel in safety! Powerful, quick-action brakes, a chassis world-famous for its sturdiness, and a body of steel—these explain the enviable reputation for safety enjoyed by Dodge Brothers Motor Car—and the enviable feeling of safety enjoyed by those who drive it.

The car will continue to be a "four." No reasoning buyer will be distracted from the issue of QUALITY by mere CYLINDER propaganda.

WHY SOAK THE FARMER?

President Coolidge is as honest a friend as the American farms ever had; he is braver, and wiser, than most of their official sympathizers, for he refuses point-blank to approve any crop-price-fixing scheme, under whatever name.

To fix a price for corn, wheat, beef, pork, puts the government into the farming business, either to pay the farmer as a beggar or rob him as a tyrant. If competitive prices are not up to the legal mark, the state must tax itself, including the farmer, to pay the deficit. If prices run higher, and with them the expenses of raising a crop, the farmer may not sell at the higher price; but the tax army goes on.

An insured price for anything is an unfair price; for the insurance requires a tax for maintenance, that in the end has to come out of the beneficiary. It increases costs, it decreases freedom. The power that can fix the price of a man's wheat at a living point, can likewise fix a low price, or take it without price, as a Soviet might do.

Once the government goes into this business, there's no end. On a price-fixing plan, there are left no free Americans; everybody is bound both as to what he sells and what he buys. The farmer cannot buy for less; for the other man must be protected. He cannot sell for more; the other man will not pay. Federal armies must be recruited to adjust and enforce these artificial prices—armies beside which the two-men-for-one-job during the federal railroad days were insignificant. Under such a system taxes must rise. Open competition may sometimes be ruthless; but it is infinitely better and more self-respecting and intelligent than federalization.

It seems certain that price-fixing and tax-raising for a federalized army of regulators are about the least desirable things yet proposed to "help" the farmer.

When Miami, Florida, wanted a $1,500,000 harbor, and Congress didn't get it quickly enough, the city advanced the cash, and the work is going on. It is one of the business seaports on the Atlantic.

Charlevoix needs both harbor improvements and a water front park. But the mere mention of an outlay of cash brings forth a howl from the standpatters. Miami is increasing in population by leaps and bounds. As a resort city it furnishes entertainment for its visitors. How far has Charlevoix advanced in the past few years and when will these needed improvements be made?

MRS. GENETT DIED AT EAST JORDAN

Was a Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Greeley of Norwood.

Mrs. William Genett died at her home in East Jordan, Tuesday morning, March 2.

Mrs. Genett was formerly Miss Doris Greeley, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Greeley of Norwood. She was born February 26, 1903, and spent her girlhood days with her parents until her marriage to William Genett of Norwood. To this union were born two daughters, Enid, one and one half years old, and Jane Marie, nine days old. Besides her bereaved husband and children she leaves her parents and one sister, Mrs. Jacob Ypma of Grand Rapids, and her grand mother, Mrs. Haskins of Norwood, along with a host of friends and relatives to mourn their loss.

Mrs. Genett was of a quiet nature and always pleasing, and will be greatly missed among those who knew her.

The funeral services were held last Friday afternoon at the M. E. church in Norwood, Rev. A. B. Clark officiating. Burial in Norwood cemetery.

We loved you, yes we loved you,
darling Doris,
But the Angels loved you more,
And they have sweetly called you
Beyond the shining shore.
The golden gates were open,
A gentle voice said come,
And with farewell unspoken
You calmly entered home.

AT THE MOVIES

Tom Mix in "Best Bad Man."

Tom Mix, Fox Film star, will be the attraction at the Palace Theatre, Saturday and Sunday, March 13-14. "The Best Bad Man" is Tom's latest film offering and he is supported by Clara Bow and one of the best casts ever assembled in a Mix production.

The latest offering in the screen version of Max Brand's novel and many of the thrilling scenes are laid in Colorado. Mix, as a rich property-owner, goes West in an attempt to settle the difficulties into which he has been plunged by his western manager.

The cast includes Tom Wilson, famous for his characterizations, and Cyril Chadwick, "genteel heavy," who, with Tom Kennedy, causes all the trouble. Other members of the cast include Judy King, inimitable comedy flapper; Frank Beal, veteran character delineator; Paul Panzer, famous for his striking work in "The Fool," and other well-known Fox actors.

Tony has his usual big moments and some of the most thrilling sequences ever photographed are seen when Mix makes a daring rescue of Miss Bow.

Bebe Daniels in "Splendid Crime"

"The Splendid Crime," which comes to the Palace Theatre next Wednesday, March 17, offers the rare combination of an unusually interesting story and a popular star.

It was written as well as produced by William de Mille, the noted Paramount director, who turned author again after a lapse of several years, and serves as a starring vehicle for Bebe Daniels. As the title suggests, the plot has a crook theme, but Mr. de Mille is said to have treated it from a serio-comic angle, so that the picture is a fifty-fifty affair, in which action and comedy vie with drama.

Takes New Lease on Life

Mr. Antoine Sharrow, R. F. D. No. 4, Charlevoix, is a booster for Pepgen. In his statement he wants others to know how this wonderful medicine helped him, when all other remedies had failed.

"My stomach was so bad even pus came up when I coughed, after eating I would be in distress and puffed up condition, and my stomach would feel as though it would burst. My appetite was fair, but what I ate soured, and gave me no nourishment.

"After taking Pepgen a short while I began to get relief. I am still taking it and it has practically cured the catarrh of my stomach. The gas is entirely gone, my appetite is good, I am gaining in weight, and I feel like a new man. Pepgen surely helped me and I will keep right on taking it."

Signed, Antoine Sharrow,
Charlevoix, Mich.

Pepgen which is so highly recommended for stomach, kidney and liver troubles, stimulates the nerves in various parts of the body, purifies the blood, and is a great system builder.

In Charlevoix Pepgen is sold under a money-back guarantee, only by F. J. Fessenden, the druggist. If you want to know more about this wonderful spring tonic, and health builder, ask him. 8tf.

MRS. SCOTT WINS IN DIVORCE SUIT

Satisfactory Properly Settlement Effected Out of Court

A Detroit news item says: The final chapter in the sensntional divorce suit, involving Congressman and Mrs. Frank D. Scott of Michigan has been written with the granting of an absolute decree to Mrs. Scott on grounds of desertion. Settlement of the suit was contrast to the original action started by Scott at his home in Alpena, late in 1924, when alleged scandals in official Washington featured his unsuccessful efforts at sepnration.

Scott filed no nnswer to his wife's suit and, though represented by counsel, left uncontested her charge of desertion from December 23, 1922. Council for Mrs. Scott announced that a property settlement satisfactory to his client was effected out of court. The Scotts were married in California in 1914. There were two children who died.

EAST JORDAN WON A DOUBLE HEADER

High School and Seventh Graders Lose Games Friday.

Charlevoix High School basket ball team dropped their second game of the year to East Jordan last Friday night, at East Jordan, by a score of 34 to 24.

East Jordnn stepped out to an early lead which was never overcome, the first half ending with the victors in the lead 8 to 16. The locals started the second half with a rush, scoring three counters before the East Jordan boys solved their new offensive. They were unable to overcome Jordan's lead of the first half, however, and the game ended with Coach Wells' men on the long end of a 34-24 score. Snyder, East Jordan guard, was the star for the winners, his floor work, long shots and dribbling being a feature of the game.

In a fast and interesting preliminary game, the East Jordan seventh graders nosed out the Charlevoix seventh grnders by one point, the contest running five minutes overtime. Billy Novak starred for the locals, making three out of their four points. The final score was 5 and 4, East Jordan's favor.

CHEBOYGAN HAS BIG LAND DEAL

Duncan Bay Property in Hands of Syndicate of Detroiters

Duncan Bny property, nenr Cheboygan, probably the most famous resort property in northern Michigan has been sold. The deal was completed last Friday evening nnd Snturday morning the loose ends were gnthered up and the purchasers and out of town owners left on the noon train for Detroit, and other points.

The deal includes 1,700 acres of resort land, bordering for almost five miles along the bay shore and Straits of Mncklnac, 200 acres of the property lie within the city limits of Cheboygan, while 500 acres are along the shore and 1,000 acres borders Elliott's creek for a distance of nbout three miles.

The purchnse price was given out ns $125,000.

Just what will be done with the property has not been decided. A plnnning engineer will likely be engaged to visit the property and after a careful study make recommendations to the new owners. Just what his recommendations will include is of course a mntter of conjecture.

"There was a good fairy flicked a wing over you, Master Bob! Glory, but ye had the happy thought. Will ye throw in with us and be a pirate chief? Troth, there'd be no better."

"Not I, Darby; but I will have a bite to eat, if such there be aboard a pirate craft."

"Lashin's of everything in nature," rejoined Darby briskly. "Sit to the table yon, and I'll fetch it from the galley."

The table was set and ready, not with course crockery and steel forks, knives and spoons, but with dainty china, heavy silverware and fine napery, too. I commented on this when Darby returned, balancing smoking dishes and a jug of hot chocolate upon a tray.

"It's me head does it," returned Darby, unabashed. "As I told ye, it brin[illegible]."

"Not to me," I retorted with a grin.

"And don't ye be too sure," he flushed. "We'll maybe sail a long ways together; and I'm your friend, Master Bob, for ye were never one to let me be put upon in the counting-room."

"Humph," said I. "That is to be seen. Where is 'himself,' as you call him?"

"Asleep in his berth. Troth, he was up until dawn coming the brig through the harbor shoals."

"Are we outside?"

"Sure, we're by and beyond what they call Sandy hook. There's only the wide ocean in front."

"I'm for the deck, then," I answered.

The companionway was empty, and I met nobody until I had climbed to the deck. T'was passing strange that I so readily adapted myself to the sea and its ways, seeing that all my life I had never been beyond the waters of the inner harbor. Yet 'tis the fact that I had no discomfort or misgiving and even acquired instinctively the sailor's tricks of standing and walking, as was commented upon by no less an authority than John Silver.

The deck was deserted forward. One man was lashed to the main crosstrees, sweeping the entire circuit of the horizon with a spyglass. Aft there were only Silver and another fellow at the wheel. The one-legged man waved to me with his crutch from his seat on the cabin skylight.

"Come and talk with Long John, Master Ormerod," he called. "Where did ye find them sea-legs o' yourn? You walk like a blasted admiral, no less."

"I found them below," I answered, for the life of me unable to resist the scoundrel's ingratiating manner. "Where are the rest of your company?"

He laughed and winked at the man at the wheel, an awful-looking creature, so heavy of shoulder as to appear deformed, with a green shade over deeply sunken eyes that were all pitted around with tiny blue scars.

"Is that foretops'l drawin' full, John?" asked the man with the green eye-shade in a voice that was singularly soft.

Silver squinted aloft.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS

Council Chambers, March 4, 1926

The common council of the city of Charlevoix met on the above date pursuant to law, with Mayor Bergeon presiding. Aldermen present: Bridge, Livingsten, Madill, Partridge, Parmelee. On motion duly made the council proceeded to canvass the votes cast at the Primary election, held March 1, 1926:

The total number of votes cast for the office of Mayor, on the Republican ticket, was 181, of which Arthur Bergeon received 174, Oluf Nordrum 3, Charles See 1, F. E. Cartier 1, A. J. Usher 1, C. S. Dodge 1. Moved by Bridge, seconded by Livingston, that Arthur Bergeon having received a majority of all votes cast, be declared the nominee of the Republican party for the office of Mayor. Motion carried.

The total number of votes cast for the office of city clerk, on the Republican ticket was 147, of which Charles H. Lampnear received 132, Elma H. Cook 12, Charles Emrey 2, John H. Bugbee 1. Moved by Livingston, seconded by Madill, that Charles H. Lamphear having received a majority of all votes cast, be declared the nominee of the Republican party for the office of City Clerk. Motion carried.

The total number of votes cast for the office of city treasurer on the Republican ticket was 162, of which Elma H. Cook received 155, Charles H. Lamphear 5, Harry A. Craig 1, John Cook 3. Moved by Madill, seconded by Parmelee, that Elma H. Cook having received a majority of all votes cast be declared the nominee of the Republican party for the office of City Treasurer. Motion carried.

The total number of votes cast for the office of justice of the peace, on the Republican ticket was 105, of which Turlton S. Dodge received 95, Jos. Cooper 3, L. E. Benton 3, William Wallace 1, A. E. Mason 1, Will Parmelee 1, W. J. Weikel 1. Moved by Madill, seconded by Livingston, that Carlton S. Dodge, having received a majority of all votes cast, be declared the nominee of the Republican party for the office of Justice of the Peace. Motion carried.

The total number of votes cast for the office of Park Commissioner on the Republican ticket was 37, of which John Zeitler received 16, Art Alcock 4, Will Wallace 5, E. A. Young 1, H. R. Fowler 5, L. P. Adams 2, R. A. Emrey 1, Robert Madill 1, Dud Markham 1, Will Parmelee 1. Moved by Bridge, seconded by Parmelee, that John Zeitler having received a plurality of all votes cast he declared the nominee of the Republican party, for the office of Park Commissioner. Motion carried.

The total number of votes for the office of Supervisor of the First ward, on the Republican ticket was 55, of which Harry A. Craig received 36 and Andrew Ross received 19. Moved by Livingston, seconded by Bridge, that Harry A. Craig having received a majority of all votes, be declared the nominee of the Republican party for the office of Supervisor of the First ward. Motion carried.

The total number of votes cast for the office of Alderman of the First ward, on the Republican ticket was 24, of which Robert Bridge received 23 and Clarence Wood 1. Moved by Partridge, seconded by Livingston, that Robert Bridge having received a majority of all votes cast, be declared the nominee of the Republican party for the office of Alderman of the First ward. Motion carried.

The total number of votes cast for the office of Constable of the First Ward, on the Republican ticket was 6, of which Joseph Howard received 3, Robert Bridge 1, Grant Crandall 1, Robert R. Boothroy 1. Moved by Bridge, seconded by Partridge, that Joseph Howard having received a plurality of all votes cast be declared the nominee of the Republican party for the office of Constable of the First ward. Motion carried.

The total number of votes cast for the office of Supervisor of the Second ward on the Republican ticket was 104, of which John H. Bugbee received 82, Simon M. Rose 21, Archie Livingston 1. Moved by Archie Livingston, seconded by Madill, that John H. Bugbee having received a majority of all the votes cast, be declared the nominee of the Republican party for the office of Supervisor of the Second ward. Motion carried.

The total number of votes cast for the office of Alderman of the Second ward, on the Republican ticket was 71, of which Robert J. Madill received 62, Charles H. Emrey 2, Oluf Nordrum 1, A. J. Hamilton 1, Fred S. Myers 1, Merritt B. Miller 1, Snm Rose, 1, Ernest Howe 2. Moved by Parmelee, seconded by Bridge, that Robert J. Madill having received a majority of all votes cast, be declared the nominee of the Republican party for the office of Alderman of the Second ward. Motion carried.

The total number of votes cast for the office of Constable of the Second ward on the Republican ticket was 13, of which Elmer J. Johnson received 8, Fred Coon 1, Sam Sorensen 1, Henry Block, George Lusk, Jr. 1, John Burns 1. Moved by Madill, seconded by Parmelee, that Elmer J. Johnson having received a majority of all votes cast, be declared the nominee of the Republican party for the office of Constable of the Second ward. Motion carried.

The total number of votes cast for the office of Supervisor of the Third ward, on the Republicnn ticket was 26, of which Archio Alcock received 25 and Will Parmelee 1. Moved by Parmelee, seconded by Madill, that Archie Alcock having received a majority of all votes cast, be declared the nominee of the Republican party for the office of Supervisor of the Third ward. Motion carried.

The total number of votes cast for the office of Alderman of the Third ward on the Republican ticket, was 28 of which William E. Parmelee received 23, Archie Alcock 2, Arthur Bergeon 1, Robt. Madill 1, John H. Bugbee 1. Moved by Partridge, seconded by Livingston, that William E. Parmelee, having received a majority of all votes cast, be declared the nominee of the Republican party for the office of Alderman of the Third ward. Motion carried.

The total number of votes cast for the office of Constable of the Third ward on the Republican ticket was 9, of which William J. Weikel received 3, Harry McHugh 1, Carlton S. WHAT IS THIS GULF WATERWAY normal, just as it has been for the past seven years. Nature in this system of reservoir lakes and of controlling dams showed itself a marvelously wise engineer.

Then along came a man to tinker with this natural reservoir arrangement. He did it in the interests of national transportation, to carry the ore of the north and the wheat of the northwest to eastern mills and markets and to bring back coal. He blasted and dug and dredged channels 20 to 22 feet in depth at low water through all the connecting rivers so huge freighters of 19-foot draft could make the trip from Duluth to Tonowanda on Niagara river with just one halt--that at the locks of Sault Ste. Marie.

Removal of these natural dams had some effect on lake levels. None as regards Lake Superior, as that was compensated for. Possibly an inch or so in Lakes Huron and Michigan as a result of channel deepening in St. Clair river, says Engineer W. S. Richmond, now of Ottawa, who was in charge of the surveys made in the preparation of the so-called Warren report on diversion of water from the great lakes. The cut through the Lime kiln crossing, he explains, was compensated for by throwing excavated material on either side, thus holding back the flow of the river as much as the dam across the bottom had done.

Big Return for Inch of Water

That St. Clair channel deepening, costing an inch or so of lake levels on Huron and Michigan, had made possible a tremendous marine traffic. A traffic carried by a stately fleet of 600 boats of 19 foot draft, ranging in size from 625-footers carrying 14,000 tons down to 300-footers carrying 1,000 to 2,000 tons. A traffic that makes Detroit river the most used waterway in the world, carrying three and one-half times as much freight in an open season of eight and one-half months as the Panama and Suez canals together carry in a full year.

Engineer Richmond estimates that the average earning for each tenth of a foot of draft for the average lake freighter is $44.57 per trip or around $600,000 a season for the entire fleet. Figuring on that basis each added foot of water that makes possible the operation of 19-foot draft boats at capacity across the old shoals means an increase of $6,000,000 on earnings to the fleet. It means, too, a corresponding saving to shippers.

Attacked by Diversion Interests

Yet down in St. Louis the writer heard the St. Clair river channel vehemently denounced as a main cause for the lowering of lake levels. This was by a person employed officially in boosting Mississippi valley navigation interests. His attitude appeared to be that the St. Clair channels were robbing the lakes of water that should be helping navigation in the Illinois and Mississippi rivers. He seemed, also, of the impression that the huge 14,000-ton capacity lake freighters compared in transportation service to the 1,300-ton capacity self-propelled barges on the Mississippi.

This is interjected as illustrating a distorted view, due to a haze of misinformation, that must be corrected on both sides, before the great lakes region and Mississippi valley can get together on this diversion issue.

What Sanitary Folks Claim

His attitude also indicates a new point of attack by the defenders and advocates of 10,000 c. f. s. diversion for Lakes-to-Gulf waterway navigation. It probably is based upon an item in a report by the Chicago Sanitary district engineering board of review, issued in January, 1925, touching on the causes of the low levels in Lakes Michigan and Huron. This item reads:

"The fall from Lake Huron to Lake Erie along the St. Clair and Detroit rivers during 1897-1923, inclusive, averaged less than in 1860-1885, inclusive. This explains a lower stage of Lakes Michigan and Huron by 8 inches."

This same report ascribes only 5 inches of the lowering to diversion from Lake Michigan at Chicago.

Engineer Richmond's finding that the channels between Lakes Huron and Erie have caused a lowering of not more than an inch or so is backed up and by the United States Lake Survey.

Other Diversions

Now for other causes of the lowering of the lakes.

Among them are diversions of the natural flow for various purposes.

These include diversion for the Welland, Ont., ship canal and accompanying water power. It amounts to 4,500 cubic feet per second and is taken from Lake Erie a few miles west of Niagara river. The New York State Barge canal takes 1,000 c. f. s. from Niagara river. The Black Rock ship canal takes 700 c. f. s. from the same source. The Niagara Power companies take 50,885. These diversions affect Lake Huron and Michigan only slightly, their total being around 0.03 of a foot. They lower Lake Erie, 4.3 inches. The Chicago Drainage canal report, quoted above, charges that the effects of this back up to Lakes Huron and Michigan, lowering them 2 inches.

Chicago's Big Drain

The one other big diversion, is that at Chicago through the drainage canal. Since 1900 this has taken a growing volume of water, ranging up from 3,500 c. f. s., to 10,000 c. f. s. or more. The flow of Lake Michigan normally is northward, through the Straits of Mackinac to Lake Huron. The Chicago drainage canal reverses much of this flow, tapping the reservoir at the end opposite the usual outlet.

Engineer Richmond, making his estimates in 1918 when the lakes were higher than they had been since 1888 figured that when the drainage canal was taking 10,000 c. f. s. it lowered the lake levels 6 inches. When it took 8,000 c. f. s. the lakes were lowered about 5 inches. At 4,167 c. f. s., the authorized diversion, the lowering was about 2½ inches.

When asked if the actual lowering effect of the diversion would be greater in times of extreme low water, with the inflow far below normal as at present, Engineer Richmond said he thought that it would be. So it may be that Chicago is responsible for more than the 5 or 6 inches which it admits.

Eight Inches

The effect of artificial causes lowering the lakes may be summarized as follows:

	Inches
Chicago Drainage canal	6.00
Welland canal and other diversions at east end of Lake Erie	0.03
St. Clair channels (at most)	2.00
Total	8.03

What's responsible for the remainder of the 3.11 feet drop from the mean level of 1918—the 2.44 feet unaccounted for?

The weather, says the Lake Survey from its Detroit office. It goes on to prove its assertion as follows:

Here Is Big Cause

"Ever since 1917 there has been an abnormal lack of precipitation over the basins of the three upper lakes, Superior, Michigan and Huron. This deficiency in rainfall and snowfall has been particularly marked in the Lake Superior drainage area. It has prevailed, too, in northern Wisconsin and in the northern part of the lower peninsula. The southern tiers of counties in Michigan have had a more normal amount of precipitation.

"The accumulative deficiency from 1917 to September, 1925, amounted to a blanket of water 62 inches deep spread over the entire surfaces of Lakes Michigan and Huron. This was figured on the deficiency in run off in the Michigan and Huron basins and on the deficiency in flow coming down from Lake Superior. Comparison was made with the 10-year period from 1905 to 1914."

And there, with the unknown effects of evaporation added the Lake Survey says, is practically all your 2.44 feet.

That Missing Water

Had that missing 62-inch mass of water gone into Lakes Huron and Michigan we would not be worrying so much right now about the matter of levels.

The estimates as to artificial causes were made in high water years. It may be possible that they will not apply so accurately to years when the outflow is bigger than the inflow. The artificial causes in a situation such as is pervailing now may be responsible for much more than 8.03 inches.

Sanitary District Says

It is interesting to note that the Sanitary district engineers offer another scale of causes. This was made when the lakes were down 31 inches instead of the present 38. Its scale follows:

	Inches
Lack of rainfall	13
Channel changes Lake Huron to Erie	8
Diversion at Chicago	5
Holding back of Lake Superior flow	3
Lake Erie diversions	2
Total	31

As noted three of these causes accounting for 13 inches are discounted by government engineers.

Lake Superior, although hit hardest by climatic conditions, has not fallen so much as the other lakes. Why not? That will be answered in the next article which deals with means of restoring and holding lake levels.

If we were back in the 17th century no doubt we would be content to live in a log cabin like our great grandfathers, but as we are living in the 20th century we want 20th century surroundings. That means the best of furnishings, decorations, etc.

NEU-TONE; the artistic, sanitary, washable, flat wall finish, is distinctly a 20th century finish. Put on in attractive combinations with a stencil border it is the de-lux yet inexpensive method of decorating the home.

If you have been depending on the out of date wall paper, kalsomine, or water color method it would be well for you to drop in and see how much more decorative and modern you can make your home, at less cost, by using Neu-Tone.

We have a full line of color samples and stencil designs, so that you can get a complete understanding of the possibilities of improvement on your present decorations.

NERVES ALL UNSTRUNG

Charlevoix Folks Should Find the Cause and Correct It.

Are you all worn out? Feel tired, nervous, half-sick? Do you have a constant backache; sharp twinges of pain, too, with dizzy spells and annoying urinary disorders? Then there's cause for worry and more cause to give your weakened kidneys prompt help. Use Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys. Charlevoix folks recommend Doan's for such troubles.

Mrs. Frank Coatta, Jr., 108 Robinson St., Charlevoix, says: "I had a dull ache through the small of my back and when I moved quickly, or stooped, sharp pains like the thrust of a knife darted across my kidneys. I became nervous and irritable and was in a run down condition. My kidneys were weak and acted too freely. Several boxes of Doan's Pills, from Fessenden's Drug Store, cured me."

BAPTIST CHURCH

A majority of our congregation live in the surrounding country and were unable to get through the snowbanks to the services last Sunday. Their absence was distinctly felt and the presence of good sized audiences surprised and delighted us. Denominational loyalty without narrowness and bigotry is greatly appreciated

The services next Sanday will be as usual with preaching morning and evening. Popular and practical themes related to the Christian life will be discussed. If the reader is not otherwise engaged you will enjoy these services, and you will be heartily welcomed.

The growth of interest in the Bible school and young people's meetings is being frequently mentioned. Our primary department is a live bunch indeed

The Aid Society is meeting at the church today doing needle work. Their financial aid the past week enabled the church treasurer to pay all outstanding indebtness. A fine condition. Their program announces a reception to their friends at the Raymond home on Antrim street, St. Patrick Day, and an Easter supper at the church on March 31st.

We loaned our pianist, Miss Nettie G. Correll, the past two months for evangelist meetings for which she is pre-eminently well fitted, and she returned to her home last Monday. Daring these two months she directed the music in a series of evangelistic meetings at Millington, Mich., with pastor H. J. Thibaut, and the "Cowboy" evangelist. The meetings opened on New Year's eve, with a baptismal service and developed grent interest. The church received a great spiritual blessing. From there she visited friends in Detroit and then went to conduct the music in revival meetings held in the United Presbyterian church of Zanesville, Ohio. She had a choir of about forty voices, many of whom were trained singers. She also had a large booster choir. There were a large number of converts and her services were greatly appreciated. She also had charge of the music in the Ministerial association which was held in the Central Presbyterian. She was urged to remain and work in that city, but we are glad she yielded to the urge to return to Charlevoix. We give her a henrty welcome home.

METHODIST CHURCH

C. E. Pollock, Minster

Next Sunday will be a great day in church. The first service begins at 10:30 a. m., and will be a service of worship, with a sermon by the pastor.

Junior church meets at 10:30 a. m., with a sermon by the pastor, followed by a story hoar in the Junior room.

Sunday school convenes at 12m.

Epworth League meets at 6:00 p. m.

An unusual and attractive vesper service will be held at 4:15 p. m. next Sunday. Several of the following carefully prepared features will make the hour very profitable; instramental music, prayer hymn-vocal solo, Mrs. Ira Adams, with violin obligato-songs, The Mothers Jewels (twenty or more childrens voices)—sermon, "Discovering the World."—Pageant, "Building the Kings Highway" (about forty persons participate in rendering this) costumes and flags of the nations. The public is invited to enjoy this wonderful hour with the church.

CHURCH OF GOD

COURIER ED. HAS A BIRTHDAY PARTY

Mr. and Mrs. John McCann Entertain in Honor of Scribe

The editor of the Courier was the victim in a well planned birthday surprise party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John McCann, Monday evening As a rule, the older a person grows, the more saspicious he is of an invitation to spend the evening out, especially if on or near the date of his birth.

In the case in question, ye Ed. had no suspicions at all, and was an easy victim. An invitation to spend the evening at cards was accepted, but no sooner had the first hand been dealt than a bunch of friends entered the room, extending congratulations.

The evening was spent playing progressive pedro, Mrs. A. L. Fitch winning first and Mrs. F. J. Fessenden, second pirzes for ladies, and A. J. Hamilton, first and Archie Livsenden, second prizes for ladies, and tlemen. In behalf of those present F. J. Fessenden presented Ye Ed. with a nice birthday token—a cute little drum—inferring, as we took it, that we had reached a stage of life when we would appreciate childish toys. Such are the indignities bestowed upon us as we advance in years.

Then to heap insult apon insult, A. L. Fitch insisted that we eat our noodles at luncheon with the drum sticks. The affair was enjoyable to the extreme. The luncheon and birthday cake complete. May we have other birthday surprises.

"Neighbors"—Friday Evening

A clever, amusing play, "The Neighbors," by Zona Glae, will be given by the Literary and Sewing Club in the M. E. church on Friday evening of this week, March 12th. The play is full of chuckles. Come and enjoy it. The play will be preceded by a fine musical program by the town's best musical talent. All for 20c and 35c.—10t1.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

Rev. B. G. Mattson, Pastor

At the morning service at 10:30 the pastor will preach on "Life's Open Doors." Sunday school at 12:00; Young People's meetings at six o'clock; followed at 7:00 by a stereopticon lecture, "The Lure of Alaska" under the auspices of the young people. The lantern has been equipped with a new attachment for incandescent lighting in place of the carbon lights and a fine reflecting power is the result. The equipment has been secured by the Young People's society and is a valuable adjunct to the resources of the church. The public is cordially invited. A free, will offering will be taken to defray the cost of transportation of the picture sets.

The pastor is following up as rapidly as time for other duties will permit, the results of the religious census, by making calls upon the people who have indicated their preference for the Congregational church. Pastoral and friendly service of any family and personal nature will be most gladly rendered in response to any request or upon any information concerning special need.

CHARLEVOIX COURIER

VOLUME 33. NUMBER 11. EIGHT PAGES. COURIER, CHARLEVOIX, MICH., WEDNESDAY, MARCH 17, 1926 PRICE $2.00 PER YEAR

COUNTY ENTITLED TO EIGHT BOYS

THIS NUMBER CAN ENROLL FOR MILITARY TRAINING

A Fine Chance For Red Blooded American Boys to Get a Wonderful 30 Day Vacation

C. M. T. C. stands for 'Citizens Military Training Camp. If you are a regulur red blocded American bny, between the ages of 17 and 24, with plenty of pep and patriotism, or if you wish to increase that commodity, sign up for a thirty day vacation ut the expense of Uncle Sam, and go down to Camp Custer, July 8, to August 6.

No educational requirements, but you must have a certificnte of good mornl character from schoolmaster or clergymen, together with medical testimony from your physician that you are in fairly good physical condition and fitted for the cnurse nf training. Taking this course does not imply later service obligations. It is not a blind to get you into the army. The thirty days are crammed full of hiking, base ball and drilling; of football, shooting and tennis; of boxing, entertainments and movies; of track and field sports, sham battles, and week end trips; of lectures and talks on the constitution and other subjects that will make a fellow have a higher appreciation of this grand and glorious country of ours.

The following may be considered n typical day for the boy in camp. He must wash cleanly, make up his bed and answers orll call and then go tn breakfast. The boy easily learns to obey, in fact, he wants to obey. No one has to make him go to breakfast. No harsh measures are ever used at these camps by the instructors. After a good breakfnst, he has n short rest, followed by brisk setting up exercises, which start the morning off just right, and he begins to "feel like a million dollars." These simple setting up exercises every morning help to develop strong and sturdy stock. Follow another short rest and then a lecture, perhaps on the constitution or some kindred subject. Then a half hours drill in marching and halting and squad movement, another short rest and then company drill or practical work. Radio is studied, horsemanship is learned. Boys are taught how to shoot a rifle. The lectures nnd talks given are on the line of citizenship, care of health, respect for womnnhood, respect for American institutions and love of your fellow man. Many distinguished visitors give talks to the students.

At noon, an excellent dinner is served. Afternoons are entirely given up to athletics, band prnctice, baseball, handball, soccer, tennis, basketball, swimming and track and field events, all under the sapervision of experts. The average weight gained for the thirty day perlod was six pounds per boy, if he wns overweight to begin with, he would loose accordingly. Boys are encouraged not to smoke or swear. At night, a good supper is served, after which entertainment is provided. The Liberty Theatre is open every evening and the hostess house is always open. Writing materials are provided free. Dances are held once a week. Neighboring communities often assist in providing entertainment and sightseeing trips. At ten o'clock, lights must be out and the boys in bed. Religious services are held every Sunday and on special occasions, for all denominations. All expense is paid by Uncle Sam, trunsportation to and from cnmps, food, shelter, unifarm and equipment. The bay will return a better hoy in every way, mentally, morally and physically, with a greater respect for his home, his country and his flag.

President Coolidge, (who has had his son in a C. M. T. C. camp each summer the past three years) has this to say about the C. M. T. C.: "These camps are an essential in the plan of nntlonal security. They promate obedience to lnw and respect for the well ordered institutions of aociety. Young men are helped to physicnl health, mental vigor, and moral excellence. Social understanding and democratic feeling are developed; lova and reverence for the flag ara the natural outcome of the trninlng. Courtesy in act, sympathy in feeling, tolorance in thought, are the ideals." Calvin Coolidge.

Last year four of our Charlevoix boys weat to Camp Custer. The writer was talking with ona of them last week and asked him how he liked the work. He said: "I liked it fine. I honestly believe I learned more from that thirty days training than I did the last year I was in high school."

Only eight boys are admitted from Charlevoix county. The number is pro-rated all over the state, on the basis of population. Our quotn last year was six and one boy who was the last to sign up, was not able to go, because the quota was filled. Dr. Dicken of East Jordan, and Dr. Conkle of Boyne City ure the local representatives in their respective localities, and the writer is representing Charlevoix and vicinity. Get an application blank from any one nf these three representatives, if you are interested, see that your boy is signed up for the coming season. Dr. F. H. Wilkinson, Charlevoix, Michigan.

Charlevoix Normal Invited

Charlevoix County Normal has been extended a special invitation to attend Central Michigan Normal's eighth annual County Normal Day, which will take place at Mt. Pleasant, Friday, April 30. All meals will be served free in Central Normal's new cafeteria. Rooms for visitors will also be provided in the private residences at Mt. Pleasant.

NEXT MEETING A FINE BANQUET

ASSOCIATION OF COMMERCE PLAN FOR BIG EVENT

Lee H. Bierce, Secretary Grand Rapids Chamber of Commerce Booked as Speaker

The March meeting of the Charlevoix Association of Commerce is scheduled for Thursday evening the 25th, and an unusually interesting program has been prepared for that time.

The business session will be preceded by a banquet at 6:30 o'clock to be served by the ladies of the Eastern Star,, and those who have heretofore attended their "feeds" will need no second invitation.

Lee H. Bierce, secretury of the Grand Rapids Chamber of Commerce, is on the program as the principal speaker of the evening and will give an address on "Put Your House In Order," which will undoubedly throw some light on our problems as a resort city and be well worth your time coming to hear. Special invitntions have been sent to officers and members of Chambers of Commerce in Petoskey, Boyne City and East Jordan and a meeting of especial interest is looked forward to. A program of musical numbers by Mrs. Archie Livingston, Mrs. A. J. Stelter and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bridge is also being arranged for the evening.

Set this date aside and plan now to attending this meeting. Much important business is to be brought up at this time and it is imperative that all business men interested in the future of our city be there and do their part. The matter of the proposed new boat club, pledges for membership having been received to the number of 26 at this time, will be one of the important matters to be brought before this meeting, along with several other matters of interest to everyone.

Don't forget the date—Thursday, March 25th, 6:30 p. m., at the Masonic hall. Let's see you there.

WILL HOLD PUBLIC AUCTION SALE

Auctioneer Byers Wants Articles at Once

W. E. Byers, of the firm Byers & Bos, auctioneers, states that sometime during the last week in March or during the first week in April, he will conduct a public auction sale in Charlevoix, date and place to be announced later through the columns of the Courier.

Mr. Byers has already a number of articles listed for sale, hut offers the public an opportunity to list what articles they desire to dispase of, and he will sell them with those he has.

Na doubt a number of Charlevoix people haye articles of household furniture they desire to sell, and if they will list them with Mr. Byers, he will include them in tho sale above mentioned. Get in toueh with him at ance, list yaur articles, and tha aale will then ba an all day affair.

ALVA L. COULTER NOW DECEASED

PASSED AWAY AT HOME HERE MONDAY EVENING

Was Staunch Republican and Held Several Political Positions While Resident Here

Alva Lincoln Coulter, a resident of this vicinity for some 55 years, died at his home on Park avenue, Monday evening at about 6:30 o'clock, after an illness of over two yenr's duration.

Mr. Coulter was born in Richland county, Ohio, October 8, 1864, coming to this vicinity with his parents when a lad six years old. His father was a Congregational minister, nnd, incidentally, the first Congregational minister in this section, being known in those days as a circuit rider, serving several congregations throughout this territory. Mr. Coulter, when about 18 years of age, moved to East Jordan, where he entered business, later coming to Charlevoix, where he made his home up until about 10 years ago.

Deceased was active in state politics, a staunch Republican, and held several political positions during his residence here, among which were deputy state oil inspector, deputy game warden and deputy internal revenue collector. He left Charlevoix about ten years ago and was identified up until the past two years with the Detroit Fidelity & Surety company, as superintendent of their claims department, living at that time in Ohio. Two years ago poor health forced his retirement from business. He wns a member of the Masonic, K of P. and Woodman lodges, also a member of the local Congregational church.

Deceased is survived by his wife and two sons, Clark C., of Detroit, and Clyde of Boston, Mass., also one grand-daughter and several brothers and sisters.

Funeral services will be held Thursday morning nt ten o'clock, from the home on Park avenue, under the auspices of the Masonic lodge, Rev. B. G. Mattson of the Congregational church, officiating. Interment at Brookside.

CLOTHING PROJECT MEETING AT BOYNE

To Be Held at Library March 26, 1:30 Slow Time

This meeting is for the purpose of organizing the entire county into groups, who wish to take advantage of the opportunity to hnve free instruction in advanced clothing work. The project will be carried on in the same manner as was the instruction last year, with local leadership.

If you have been a leader, or a member of a class, or want to enroll in a class, or would like to carry the work back to your community, by all means attend this meeting. Remember this project is open to all ladies in the county, whether enrolled in last year's classes or not. We want a class for all to get the instruction, for last year's results have proven its benefits and value to those who enrolled.

Miss Brekke of the Home Economica Department of M. S. C., will be present to organize the groups and give the details and outline of tho work to be given.

Remember the time, place and date and be sure and attend.

ILLINOIS PLAN OF BIG CONERN TO ALL MICHIGAN

No. 11

(By Arthur W. Stace.)

Two agencies can restnre the levels of Lakes Michigun, Huron nnd Erie. They are Divine Providence and human engineering.

Providence can do the job as it has done it for centuries and centuries past by by sending rains and snows that will provide inflow sufficient to fill the lake reservoirs to their normal capacity.

Human engineering can provide works at the outlets of the lakes that will hold hack the outflow so as to assist the inflow in building up and maintaining the desired levels. But human engineering in attaining its ends is dependent upon the inflow supplied by Providence.

Dumming the unnatural leak at Chicago will not give the lakes back their normal levels. That must be apparent to readers who face the acts presented in the preceding article in this series. It would raise the lakes some six inches, leaving around 31 more inches to go to attain the mean level of the year 1918.

Works to Retard Flow

Something more has to be done. Tho problem has grown far beyond the matter of stopping the Chicago drainage diversion. And the solution must go beynnd, too, or else it may prnve fundamentally ineffective.

The human part nf the solution is definitely suggested in the Warren report. The report, based on a study made at a time when nature was providing a generous inflow for the great lakes, pointed out that the lowering of lake levels caused by the Chicago druinage canal and other diversions could be more than overcome by the construction of controlling works in the Niagara river nnd of a series of submerged weirs in St. Clair river below the mouth of Black river.

Two types of engineering works have been suggested—controlling or regulating works and compensating works. Controlling or regulating works are in effect dams with moveable sluices by which the flow of water may be controlled. Compensating works are submerged wiers in the bottom of a stream or obstructions at the sides of the main channel which tend to hold back the flow. They are immoveable and serve in the place of natural dams such as shoals and reefs removed in channel improvement.

Engineer W. S. Richmond is considering methods of raising the lakes to make up for the Chicago diversion presented tho view in his part of the Warren report that compensating works in the form of submerged weirs should be placed both in Niagara and St. Clair rivers.

To Raise Lake Erie

The bonrd of engineers for rivers and harbors in reviewing this report in 1920 favored controlling works in the Niagara river at tho outlet of Lake Erie whereby the discharge of the stream and the height of the lake could be regulated very definitely. This recommendation was made in view of matters developing after the making of Engineer Richmond'a investigations, including more definite steps toward the construction of the St. Lawrence ship canal from lakes to the sea, which would involve regulating works in that stream and do away with fear of damage from regulation above.

New Situation Has Arisen

The recommendation of the board of engineers seems to meet the very serious situation that hns developed since the Warren report was made—the decline of lake levels from normal height to unprecedented low levels. It has become apparent that tn meet such an extraordinary situation, which may have in it some element of permanency, or which may be liable to recur even if levels come back temporarily, sumethig decidedly more must be done than was contemplated in suggestions designated simply to compensate lake levels for the Chicago diversinn.

It even has been suggested that controlling works be placed in St. Clair river at the outlet of Lake Huron, with locks to overcome the difference in Lake Huron and Lake Erie levels thus created. Bout men are all against this as locks would involve a delay of an hour or more on each trip. Boat men are also against compensating works in St. Clnir river as by retarding the flow outside the channel the current in the channel would be increased. But the boat

NEW PLAN FOR SCHOOL CENSUS

WORK STARTED THURSDAY BY D. F. MEECH

New Blanks Require Information More Detailed Than Required Under Former System

Darwin F. Meech, who has been appointed by the local board of education to take the schonl census this year in the city Charlevoix, began his duties Thursday morning and will call at each home some time before the first of April. In previous years this census has been taken in May, but this year the information must be secured before March 31. Because of this fact that the work must be done quickly, school authorities have expressed the hope that parents will co-operate with Mr. Meech in this work.

The new law, acts No. 301 of the public acts of 1925, provide that hereafter the superintendent of public instruction shall designate annually the time for taking the school census. Under this act the time from March 11 to 31 has been allotted.

The law also provides that a special form nf census blank shall be used and that informntion shall be secured in full from each family. Each enumerator must make a list in writing of the names nnd ages of all children who are five years of age and under twenty years of age, whose parents or legal guardians reside in the school district, together with the names of the parents or guardians, giving the street and residence number in each case.

In addition the following information must not he secured: parents' previous address; whether parent is home owner or tenant; county of birth; whether parent is citizen of the United Stntes or not; place and date of birth of each child; physical defects, if any; whether child is employed or not; and whether attendance is at public or non-public school.

LOCAL WOMAN WAS CITED FOR BRAVERY

Mrs. Winifred Campbell One of Four Who Stuck to Post

In the March 5 issue of The Ventura County Star, published at Venturn, California, Mrs. Winifred Campbell of this city, who, with her husband, have been spending the winter there, wns one of four telephone operators cited for bravery during a fire which swept the building occupied by the telephone exchange. We quote in part their editorial commenting on the hernism of the operators:

"The Star takes off its hat to the four women af the Ojai valley telephone exchange who stuck to their bonrds this morning while the flames raged about them. They kept up uninterrnpted service at a time when it was greatly needed and under conditions of personal discamfort and peril.

To Mrs. Winfred Campbell, Mrs. Elvie Harrow, Mrs. Pearl Hudlburg and Miss Ruth Downing, The Star's warmest congratulations!"

BOYNE CITY WINNER IN CLASS C

PELLSTON EASILY CARRIED OFF CLASS D HONORS

First Annual Regional Tournament Carried On Successfully.—Large Crowds Witness Games

The first annual district tournament for the 26th district, staged at Harbor Springs last Thursday, Friday and Saturday, was a success from every standpoint. Large and enthusiastic crowds witnessed all the games and rivalry was keen between the various teams in both classes C and D. Attractive prizes were awarded the winner and runner-up in both classes who also proved their right to enter the regional tournament at Petoskey this week.

Follnwing is a summary of games played:

Thursday

The first game, that between Bellaire and St. Ignace, showed fine team work between teams very evenly matched and as a result was a very interesting game. The finul whistle found St. Ignace in the lead 28 to 22.

In the next game, Mackinaw City triumphed over Central Lake to the tune of 27 to 21 in a contest that furnished plenty of amusement for the crowd. Both games were between class D teams.

The only class C game Thursday was played between Harbor Springs and Boyne City, the latter winning hy a score of 28 to 22. This contest was closely fought throughout, the score being an 18 to 18 tie during the third quarter. Owing to the aggressiveness of Dixon and Friedley, Boyne City stars, their team won by a six point margin.

Friday

The first game Friday morning was between Pellston and Ellsworth, in class D, resulting in any easy victory for Pellston, 39 to 8.

The second game Friday morning resulted in Alanson trimming Alba in a fast and interesting game which went into an overtime period, by n score of 15 to 11.

Friday afternoon at 1:30, Charlevoix made her first appearance on the floor and was beaten by the East Jordan five in a fast and interesting game, score 24 to 17. Best, East Jordan forward, proved Charlevoix's downfall making 20 of his team's points. Brown, Charlevoix center, starred for the locals, making 11 of their 17 points.

From 2:30 to 3:00 Friday afternoon, St. Ignace trimmed Boyne Falls, in a one-sided game, 41 to 10.

Starting the evening session, tho first game in the consolation tournament was staged between Ellsworth and Central Lake, the latter winning 18 to 7.

In the next game, the semi-final in class D, Pellston walked over Mackinaw City for a decisive victory, 43 to 11.

The next game, the semi-final in class C, was won by Boyne City, who defeated Mancelona, 20 to 17. Dixon again starred for Boyne, making 15 of their points.

In the last game Friday evening, St. Ignace won easily from Alanson, by a score of 39 to 7.

Saturday

Saturday morning, in the consolation tournament, Bellnire defeated Albn 18to 15 in a game that showed action every minute and was exciting to watch.

In the second game of the morning one of the best games of the tournament was played between Charlevoix and Harbor Springs, Harbor winning by a one point margin, 23 to 22. Charlevoix led until the last quarter, when Harbor gained 8 to the locals 4 points in the final period.

In the first game Saturday afternoon Boyne Falls lost to Bellairo by a score of 20 to 4. This was followed at 3 o'clock by Mackinaw City and Alanson, playing for third place. The Straits boys won 25 to 8. At 7 o'clock, Bellaire, playing their third game of the day, fell before Central Lake, Joe Devlin scoring 18 of his teams's 29 points. Bellnire's score totaled 23. This was the final consolation game in Class D.

Pellston Wins Class D

At 8 o'clock, Pellston met St. Ignaca to decido the class D championshlp. Pellston was backed by a good sized homa crowd who saw their team carry off tha honors with a score of 26 to 14. The Pellston outfit is well

AT THE MOVIES

"The Dixie Merchant"

"The Dixie Merchant"—a Fox films production, directed by Frank Borzag and featuring J. Farrell MacDonald in the title role with Madge Bellamy and Jack Mulhall, comes to the Palace Theatre, Saturday and Sunday, March 20-21.

Into this absorbing story of the south are woven thrills, romance, comedy and pathos—all the ingredients of a successful picture—entwined in such a way as to hold the interest from start to finish. Added to this the cast fits exceptionally well into their respective parts and the plot is devoid of complicating kinks.

Jack Mulhall is Jimmy Pickett, who literally carries off the fiery little Adia, makes her listen to his proposal—and then goes to work to prove he can support her. He is a typical rich man's son playing his part for all there is in it.

Frank Borzage, who is noted for his ability to make masterpieces from simple, human stories directed the production and is enthusiastic over the results.

ANOTHER CHARLEVOIX CASE!

Time -tested By a Charlevoix Resident

Just another report of sickness and suffering relieved by Doan's Pills. Another Charlevoix case that tells of lasting benefit. What can be more convincing? Thousands recommend Doan's for backache, rheumatic pains, headaches, dizziness and distressing urinary disorders. Doan's are a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys. They have helped thousands. A Charlevoix case:

Daniel Himebauch, 107 W. Upright Ave., Charlevoix, says: "My back ached and mornings when I got up, catches took me across my kidneys. My kidneys were weuk and acted irregularly. I heard a lot about Doan's Pills, so I used a few boxes, from Metcalf's Drug Store, and they fixed me up in fine shape." (Statement given May 4, 1920.)

On October 10, 1924, Mr. Himebauch said: "I am glad to recommend Doan's Pills for they certainly helped me."

Quaker Oats "stands by" you through the morning

Has the "bulk," too; that makes laxatives seldom needed

THOUSANDS have unenergetic mornings because they start the day with breakfasts that lack in certain important food elements.

To feel right, you must have a well-balanced, complete breakfast ration. At most other meals—lunch and dinner—you get it. But breakfast is a horried meal, often badly chosen

Thus Quaker Oats, containing 16% protein, food's great tissue builder, 58% carbohydrate, its great energy element, plus all-important vitamines and the "bulk" that makes laxatives seldom needed, is the dietetic urge of the world today.

It is food that "stands by" you through the morning. Quick Quaker cooks in 3 to 5 minutes. That's faster than plain toast. Don't deny yourself the natural stimulation this rich food offers you.

Spraying for San Jose Scale Is Proper Plan

The San Jose scale is again making serious inroads into orchards, according to the entomologists of the state agricultural experiment station at Geneva. The great activity of nurserymen and orchardists in combating the scale several years ago practically eliminated the pest as a menace to fruit growing in New York. Lately, however, vigilance has been relaxed to the extent that the scale is again becoming a serious problem in many orchards.

Fruit growers everywhere are urged by the station officials to be on the lookout for badly infested trees as a menace to fruit growing in New York. Lately, however, vigilance has been relaxed to the extent that the scale is again becoming a serious problem in many orchards.

Fruit growers everywhere are urged by the station officials to be on the lookout for badly infested trees as they prune their orchards. The twigs and small branches of severely infested trees have a grayish, scurvy look which may extend even to the main branches. By marking such trees special attention can be given to them when the spraying is done later on.

Spraying with lime-sulphur at a strength of one part lime-sulphur to eight parts of water early in the spring just as the buds began to swell will hold the scale in check, it is said. Trees which have been marked as having a heavy infestation should receive extra careful spraying in the spring.

Mulching Strawberries Is of Much Importance

A great many strawberry growers neglect to provide winter protection for the strawberry patch. Straw is the best material to use and it should be applied after the ground is frozen. Any time in late November or early December will do. The object of mulching is not to prevent the ground from freezing, but to keep it from alternate freezing and thawing, which so often causes a heaving of the plants.

The mulching should be left on until spring, when there is indication that growth will start. It should not be left on longer than that, otherwise the plants may smother out. The advisable thing to do is to rake the mulching material from off the plants onto the ground between the rows where it should be left until after fruiting time for the purpose of conserving moisture and keeping the ripening fruit free from dirt.

"She'll do," he decided.

"Would you mind telling me how a blind man can steer?" I inquired.

The man with the green eye-shade chuckled in a way to chill your blood, so sardonic, so overpoweringly evil was the caliber of the mirth it suggested.

"Don't go to makin' up your mind Pew can't see everything, Master Ormerod," said Silver, shifting his crutch. "I'd hate to have him decide to take a shot at me. Steer? Well now, what's needed in steerin'? A strong arm, says you, and you says true. Also and likewise, an ear for canvas. Lastly and leastwise, an eye for the course.

"Any man can read a compass, young gentleman; but not every sailorman can feel how his ship takes the wind and meets his rudder quick when she wants meetin'. Pew can. Give him some one like me to play eyes for him, and he'll steer as straight a course as a pocket-boat wi' a bonus on the voyage."

"Are there many cripples in your crew?" I asked curiously.

"Cripples?" repeated Silver. "It all depends on what you might mean. There's cripples and cripples. Some on 'em ye pays their screw—"

"Their what?" I interrupted.

"Their screw, the what d'ye call it—insurance money. So much we get from the prize money extry for the hurt. Pew, he got a thousand pounds, which same he blowed in three nights in St. Pierre. D'ye mind, Ezra? I got eight hundred pounds for my leg—end fair enough, if you asks me."

"And that eight hundred pounds I'll gamble you ha' stowed away in a safe hole, John," said Pew with a gentleness which gave the words a peculiarly sinister significance.

Silver nodded almost complacently.

"What I gets, I keeps. I'm none o' your free spenders, rich today, poor tomorrow. Some day I'll be retirin' from piratin', and then I'll aim to ride in my own coach and sit in parleyment."

"You'll have to sail your own ship first, John," said Pew, and the remark was fraught with implications that made me turn cold at the pit of my stomach.

It was as if you could see the trail of bloodshed and suffering Silver would blaze to possess that ship and to exploit her to advantage.

"And why not?" returned Silver vigorously. "We'll name no names, Ezra, but captains can't live for ever. Some is aged and some soaks theirselves in rum. You never know! You never know!"

"There's Bill Bones, as has ideas on the subjeck," remarked Pew.

And he contrived to make me feel the horror of a long-drawn-out feud and rivalry.

"Yes, there's Bill," ruminated Silver. "Flint's mate, is Bill. Flint's best pal, is Bill. Flint's confeydantey, some says, is Bill. Well, well! But we was talkin' o' cripples and how a blind man can steer, which is a long way off from Bill, who isn't neither crippled nor blind, and maybe has hopes, so he has, when he remembers that."

Pew laughed so coldly, with such demoniac inhumanity, that I experienced a sudden fellow-feeling for Master Bones, distasteful as I had found him—also, a pronounced desire to change the subject. The bare proximity to such whole-souled, heartless cruelty was unpleasant.

"Do you commonly indulge in exploits like yesterday's, Silver?" I asked. "Did you take this ship designedly to carry you into New York?"

"You might say truthfully she was the best fitted for it of several," he acknowledged. "Blow my other stick off if she was good for anything else."

"Not forty pounds in her," mumbled Pew, twiddling the wheel-spokes.

"Her crew—"

Silver raised his eyebrows and gave me a slow wink.

"Poor unfortunates! 'Twas one time we couldn't take chances."

Pew's chuckle trickled icily from under the eye-shade which cast a green blur over his whole lower face.

"I suppose there is a hell for such as you," I said, trying to keep my voice steady.

"Some says there is and some says there isn't," answered Silver reasonably. "No use to worry, says I."

I was so wrought up that I think I must have come to blows with them but for a fortunate diversion. Bones and several other men emerged from the fo'csle hatch, yawning and stretching their arms, evidently having just arisen from sleep. At the same moment Peter Corlaer climbed from the cabin companionway, lurched for a moment, on his feet and then staggered precariously toward the bulwarks. I started for'ard to aid him, and Bones ran aft with a loud yell.

"Don't ye spoil my decks, ye fat cow!" he shouted.

Poor Peter, regardless of both of us, seized a stay and clung to it abjectly, quite helpless. Bones reached him first and gave him a shove which sent him plunging into the scuppers head first.

"Get up," snarled Bones, and dealt him a vicious kick with a heavy seaboot.

Peter groaned, and I caught Bones by the arm.

"D—n you for a coward!" I shouted. "Captain Murray bade you use us gently. Is this how you obey?"

He snatched free of me and yanked out a knife.

"Obey, ye lousy lubber!" he howled. "I'm Flint's mate, and I'll show ye who can say obey to me. Get back there or I'll cut your heart out and eat it afore ye."

I looked about me for a weapon, anxious to give him a lesson; but there was not a sign of anything handy, and I backed away cautiously from the menace of his knife. Silver shouted to him to let us be, as did one or two others; but his only answer was a string of the curses in which he was so proficient; and he continued to circle after me.

For myself I was not greatly frightened, for, as it chanced, knife-fighting was an art in which I was somewhat expert, thanks to instruction from my father's Indian friends; but I was concerned lest the scoundrel make a dart at Peter and slay the Dutchman as he lay inert. Judge of my amazement then when Peter swayed to his feet, holding on to the bulwarks to pull himself erect. His face was white, but he abandoned his support without hesitation and advanced, crooked-legged, across the deck toward us.

"I take him, Bob," he said.

I jumped between him and Bones in time to stop the pirate's rush, dodging a knife-thrust by the width of my coat-sleeve.

"Keep away, Peter," I panted. "I can handle him. You can't. You'll—"

"I take him," repeated Corlaer.

He reached out his hand, grabbed my shoulder and spun me from his path as easily as if I had been a child. And I did not attempt to return to his side, for I had felt the strength in his arm and knew that I had no cause to question his ability to take care of himself against any man, however armed.

"Let him be, Bill," called Silver again—was I wrong in fancying his tone unduly officious, provocative?

"I'm d—d if I do," rasped Bones. "If he wants it, he'll get it."

He sprang at Peter with knife upraised, aiming to slash his throat; but Peter moved with lightning speed to counter him. One immense arm, thick as a tree-bough, shot out and imprisoned the wrist of the knife-hand; a twist, and the knife pinged on the deck. The other arm captured a thigh, and Bones was reared above Peter's head.

Peter gave him a preliminary shake as if to prove to him how completely he was in his power and started to walk back to the lee bulwark. Bones shrieked like the lost soul he was, certain that Peter intended to cast him into the sea; but half-way across the deck Peter came to a loose halyard. He lowered Bones carelessly, tucked him under one arm and proceeded to reeve a landsman's slip-noose. We all watched him with utter fascination, and it is an indication of the pirates' code in such affairs that none of them intervened. But Peter was not to hang Master Bones.

"Your object is no doubt praiseworthy, Peter," remarked my great-uncle from the cabin companionway behind us, "but I fear I must request you to let the man go. He is of some value to a friend of mine."

Peter regarded Murray curiously.

"He knifes Robert and me—is," answered the Dutchman.

"He will not do it again," Murray assured him. "Master Bones!"

Peter regretfully unhitched the noose from Bones' neck and administered a shove which sent him reeling across the deck, to carom into the butt of the mizzenmast, recoiling with the loss of a broken tooth and ending up in a battered heap at Murray's feet. My great-uncle regarded the fellow with obvious displeasure.

"Stand up, Master Bones," he said.

Bones stumbled to his feet, bleeding from several cuts and scratches. He was very plainly frightened at what lay ahead of him.

"Master Bones," resumed my great-uncle, "you are for the present under my command, and I happen to have somewhat old-fashioned theories as regards discipline and the carrying out of orders. You have recently disobeyed an order of mine."

"Sure, I didn't—"

"Master Bones," my uncle went on without raising his voice, "did you ever know a man named Fotheril—Jack, I believe, was the given name?"

Bones nodded, unable to speak.

"And what did I order done to him, Master Bones?"

Bones moistened his lips.

"Keel-hauled, he was."

"Correct," agreed my great-uncle. "Keel-hauled. A most expressive phrase, Robert," he added to me. "Technically, I should explain, it involves drawing a man under the keel of a vessel. It has—shall we say?—unpleasant consequences."

He turned to Bones.

"No man disobeys an order of mine more than once, Master Bones. That is all. You may go, for'ard."

The man started to slouch off, wiping the blood from his cheek with his coat sleeve; but Peter stepped in front of him.

The Dutchman took an oaken belaying-pin from the rack around the mizzenmast, held it out toward Bones and the others and calmly broke it in two with his bare hands and tossed the fragments overside.

"Admirable!" exclaimed my great-uncle. "What words could hope to express so much as that gesture? And it intrigues me to note that Corlaer has a distinct taste for the dramatic, Silver, has the lookout sighted any vessel?"

"Not a sail since we cleared Sandy hook, sir," the one-legged man answered briskly.

"Very good. Keep on this course and call me at once should a sail show in any quarter." And he descended with proper dignity to his breakfast.

CHAPTER VI

Tall Ships and Lawless Men

There was a noticeable tightening of discipline after my great-uncle's admonition to Bones, and Peter and I were let severely alone, except by Silver, who, I think, found satisfaction in annoying the mate by the effusiveness of his cordiality to us. A second lookout was sent into the fore-top, and the watch on deck were continually on the alert.

My great-uncle paced the deck with measured strides throughout the afternoon, his head bent upon his chest, not a word for anybody. When night came he supervised the hoisting of two lanthorns, red and green, one above the other, to the main truck; and he ate very little of the excellent meal which Silver cooked in the galley and Darby served us in the cabin.

Peter was almost himself again, although he dared eat but little and suffered qualms when the brig rolled much from the perpendicular. He was asleep as soon as he lay down, but I drowsed lightly for some hours, and all that time I could hear overhead the tap-tap-tap of footfalls in even cadence as my great-uncle strode from the stern railing to the cabin companionway and back again.

Yet when I went on deck in the morning it was to discover Murray already there, dressed with his customary impeccable precision, his face fresh and unfatigued. He stood straddle-legs by the wheel, hands clasped behind him, his gaze fixed upon the tossing waters ahead.

"You seem perturbed," I said.

"I am," he returned frankly. "I have two problems upon my mind."

"Unfortunately, I see no signs of pursuit," I answered.

He smiled.

"Nor will you, Nephew Robert. No, my problems are connected with the difficult task of attaining an imaginary spot in this trackless waste and puzzlement as to whether I have correctly estimated an equation of human values. You are not, perhaps, mathematical? Ah, too bad! There is no mental exercise so restful and diverting to the mind as algebra. But figures lack the warm interest of human equations. As, for instance, the exact degree of trust to be imposed in untrustworthy persons."

"Sail ho!" shouted the lookout in the main crosstrees.

Murray's calm face flushed with sudden emotion, and he took a step forward.

"Where does she lie?" he trumpeted through his clasped hands.

"Maybe one, two points to larboard, sir."

"Can you make her out?"

"Only tops'ls, sir; big 'uns."

"Let me know as soon as you make her," said Murray, and turned back to me.

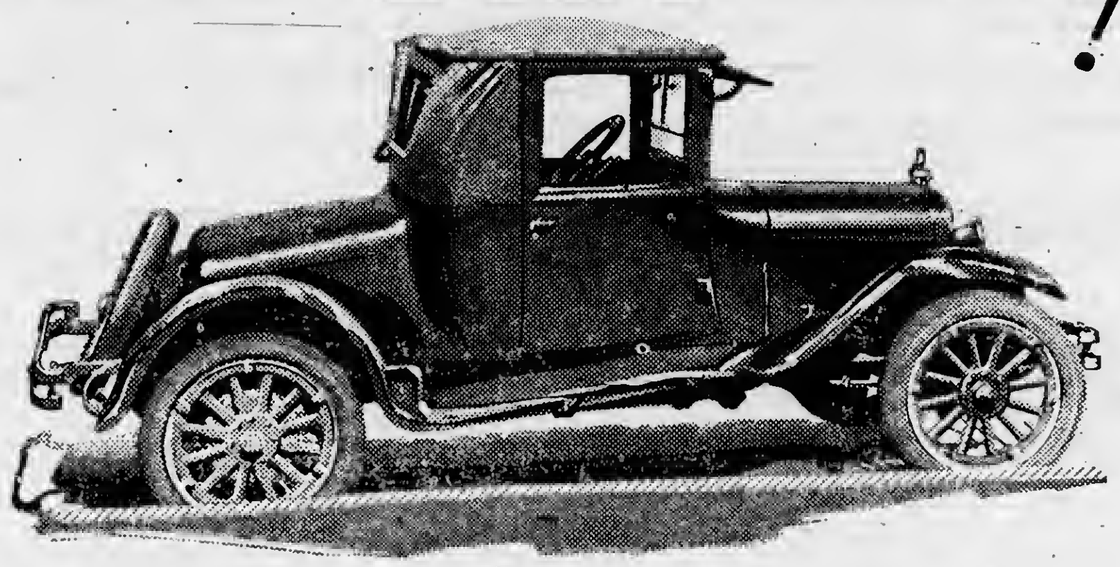
"YOU ARE ENTITLED TO KNOW THE FACTS"
DODGE BROTHERS, INC.

Over a Cliff in this STEEL BODY without injuring the DRIVER!



A careless driver . . . A triple somersault over a cliff . . . and this is the car—a Dodge Brothers all steel safety car.

A triple somersault over a cliff with the car you see in this picture! Such was the experience of its owner, who came through the fall uninjured.

After an hour of repair work, he drove the car from Montana to Minneapolis—a more sensible driver and much wiser.

All steel construction saved his life, as it has saved many other lives in the past, and will save thousands more in the future . . . . . .

Dodge Brothers print this advertisement because they believe motorists are entitled to all steel safety and should insist upon it.

That's why Dodge Brothers introduced all steel construction more than eleven years ago—and recently announced additional all steel safety features.

The streets are swarming with 20,000,000 motor cars—millions more are on the way.

Safety is the issue. Armor yourself and your family with steel.

Dodge Brothers Motor Cars—both open and closed—are all steel in the strictest sense of the term. Steel reinforced by steel—framed, braced and buttressed by steel—with all seams solidly and permanently welded together by electricity.

Slim steel pillars replace the old bulky wooden corner posts—permitting unparalleled driving vision—a safety feature of the first importance.

Compare such bodies with the usual wood, or wood-and-metal body, and you will be astonished that every automobile builder has not adopted this advanced safety construction.

Remember, also, that safety is the watchword of Dodge Brothers construction throughout, as witnessed by Dodge Brothers exceptionally large, quick-action brakes, and the exceptional ruggedness and dependability of Dodge Brothers axles, frames, steering parts, and other vital units.

This car will continue to be a "four."

"EVERYBODY LOSES WHEN TIMBER BURNS"

Educational Campaign to Prevent Forest Fires in Michigan

The Michigan Press Association through its member papers and by means of animated picture signs is fostering an extensive campaign to aid the state in educating citizens and tourists to the importance of watchful care in avoiding forest fires.

Devasting forest fires not only affect the owners of timber but indirectly every business interest and property owner in the state.

Specially prepared advertisements, placed in all papers which are members of the Michigan Press Association, will reach the people in every locality of the state and forcibly impress upon them the serious results of forest fires.

The Scene-In-Action Corporation will place in hotel lobbies—particularly along tourist routes—schools and other places where people congregate, a scene depicting a ravaging forest fire. In this "Scene-In-Action" picture the flickering of the flames flare and sink as though actually fanned by the breeze, lighting on the surrounding landscape with vivid, colorful flashes. The smoke rolls upward exactly as it would do in nature, now whirling in mad spirals, now floating serenely. Only the heat and crackle of flames are wanting to make the illusion perfect.

This part of the campaign will reach the resort tourists, many of whom are visiting the state for the first time, little realizing that a careless toss of a lighted match or an unquenched camp fire may start a conflagration of inestimable loss.

This picture confronting them in every hotel lobby along their route cannot but make a strong and lasting impression upon them. Only the vandal deliberately destroys property.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

Rev. B. G. Matison, Pastor

Morning worship at 10:30 with a sermon on "Questioning Jesus."

12:00 Sunday school.

6:00 Young People's meeting; the Senior Christian Endeavor meeting will have a talk by Mrs. Sterritt on "Light Houses." The topic will be of unusual interest and should be enjoyed by a full attendance. The Juniors meet in the church dining room led by Mr. Alexander. Both societies enjoyed social events the past week, a sleigh for each. The Seniors met after the ride for a delightful evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fessenden. The Juniors for a potluck supper at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Miller.

At 7:00 p. m. the pastor will give readings and comments on "Christ, the Companion of the Modern Poets." Those who care for a quiet hour in the great companionship where beauty and inspiration are freely shared will enjoy this service.

FIRE AT STEVENSON HOME TUESDAY

Roof Blaze Caused Very Small Financial Loss

The local fire department was called out at about 3 o'clock Tuesday afternoon in answer to an alarm sent in from the W. J. Stevenson home, 921 State street.

The fire started on the south side of the roof, probably from a chimney spark. Quite a bit of the roof was burned before the blaze was put out, necessitating reshingling that portion. No water was used and the only damage inside was caused from smoke, which was very slight.

ROYAL NEIGHBOR DANCE A SUCCESS

Social Function Nets Lodge a Substantial Amount

A happy bunch attending the dancing party last Wednesday evening at the Lakeside Pavilion, given by the Royal Neighbors of America.

The dance was well attended and from current reports, the affair was a success, both socially and financially. Credit and commendation is due Messrs. W. T. Driggett and James Bogart, who took charge and carried it out to a successful issue.

Music furnished by an orchestra composed of Ironton young people kept the dancers on their toes every minute.

ENTERTAIN EDITORS AT HARBOR SPRINGS

Business Men and Chamber of Commerce to Entertain

Following the acceptance by the Michigan Press Association of the invitation extended by Harbor Springs last month at the annual meeting of the association in East Lansing, to be host to the association at the time of their Summer Outing in June, the forces of Harbor Springs are organizing to make the event the most successful ever undertaken. E. J. Hanna, publisher of The Emmet County Graphic, at Harbor Springs extended the invitation and was made chairman of the Summer Outing committee. He was also made chairman of the Harbor Springs entertainment committee and states that a program is being arranged that will make the publishers of the state have the most delightful three days they ever enjoyed.

Everything is to be free to the publishers and their wives. The Wequetonsing Hotel, under the management of L. G. Davis, has offered this ideal resort hotel as headquarters. This is where the guests will room. Ramona Park Hotel, thru the owner, Frits Cremer, has offered a dinner dance, including the orchestra. Forest Beach Inn, Sager and Reeves, proprietors will provide one banquet and Mr. Simpson, owner of the Emmet Hotel, another. The Methodist and Presbyterian churches have each offered to provide a meal. Canada Bros. cigar store will kick in with cigars and ice cream. Other attractions will be furnished. The Chamber of Commerce will pay the incidental expenses.

Three golf links, an indoor golf course, tennis courts, boats, bathing facilities, autos, etc. will be available. Those who make the trip here for the first time will be astounded at the thousands of beautiful summer homes, the wonderful Little Traverse Bay, the sunsets, the pure artesian water, the virgin trees and sandy beaches, in this—the center of the Playground of a Nation.

COMING NUMBER IS A GOOD ONE

Male Quartet and Bell Ringers Here Thursday Night

Jack Wood, organizer of Jack Wood's Male Quartet and Bell Ringers, who will appear here on the Lyceum course Thursday evening, March 18, is a versatile and clever entertainer, long known as one of the leading bell ringers of the country. With him in his company are three other entertainers of experience and attainments.

The bell ringing selections are always wonderfully received by the audience. The numbers presented are unusually varied and the effect is novel and unique. A descriptive number, Sunday morning in London, is one of the favorities of the company's program.

All four members of the company are excellent singers and put into their songs an infectious enthusiasm and verve. A feature of the program is a group of ballads sung to the accompaniment of the bells.

Instrumental numbers played on violin, cello, banjo and piano, and humerous readings are also to be found on the big program given by this company.

Friday and Saturday, 25 per cent discount on all beads, also many stamped goods, at the Holley Gift Shop.—Adv. 11t3.

METHODIST CHURCH

Services next Sunday:
Morning worship, 10:30 a. m.
Junior church, 10:30 a. m.
Sunday school, 12:00 noon.
Epworth League, 6:00 p. m.
Evening worship, 7:00 p. m.

A great feature service next Sunday evening will be of special interest and helpfulness in the following features: Choral singing, echo singing, special music, pulpit editorial, "Which is the Oldest Church." drama sermon, "The Terrible Meek." The sermon will be built around that wonderful drama of the crucifixion, written by Kennedy. This book has just been added to our city library and is worth the earnest consideration of all. The public is invited to participate in this unusually great evening of worship.

Next week will be an eventful week in this church. The pastor and his people have carefully planned two weeks of special feature services for the observance of the Passion Week's thoughts of devotion and service. These services are for all. The idea of the church is to keep fresh in the minds of all the line, glad Christian sentiment that is associated with the ministry of Jesus Christ. Monday evening will be rest evening. There will be no church service. Tuesday evening will be Family night. About sixty special slides from the Detroit Area office will be used to show the meaning of Family religion. The beautiful hymn slides for the hymn, "Savior The Dying Love," will also be used. Wednesday evening will be announced in the church bulletin. Thursday evening the Epworthians, their young friends and the pastor will lunch together at the church at 6:15. A brief program of short talks and music will follow the supper. Then all will go to the church auditorium, where everyone is invited to an evening with "Pictures That Preach." Every person who attends will be given a copy of a great religious masterpiece of art to take home with them for keeps. The sermon will be brief and built around the theme of this picture. On Friday evening the remarkable pageant, "The Challenge of the Crosses," will be reproduced. Don't miss this and the other features that go with it, because the program given here is only an outline of the good things for those who will spend a happy and thoughtful hour four evenings of the week at church. There are no strings tied to these meetings. No collections will be taken during the week evenings. No embarassing situations will be forced upon anyone. Just come and worship according to your understanding of these matters.

THE BUSY MAN

If you want to get a favor done
By some obliging friend,
And want a promise, safe and sure.
On which you may depend,
Don't go to him who always has
Much leisure time to plan,
But if you want your favor done,
Just ask the busy man.

The man with leisure never has
A moment he can spare.
He's alwnys "putting off" until
His friends nre in despair.
But he whose every waking hour
Is crowded full of work
Forgets the art of wasting time
He cannot stop to shirk.

So when you want a favor done
And wnnt it right away,
Go to the man who constantly
Works twenty-four hours a day,
He'll find a moment sure, somewhere,
That has no other use,
And fix you while the idle man
Is frnming an excuse.

But almost at once the other lookout in the foretop sang out—

"Second sail to larboard, sir, comin' up arter t'other chap!"

Murray rubbed his hands together with every evidence of satisfaction.

"Ah!" he exclaimed. "It appears that my estimation of the safe degree of trust to be imposed in the given situation was within the bounds of accuracy."

"I Trust Nobody Further Than I Most," He Retorted.

"I don't understand you."

"No? In plain English let us say then that my own vessel and consort are meeting me according to plan."

"Why do you speak of trust?" I challenged. "Cannot you trust your own people?"

"I trust nobody farther than I must," he retorted.

And without another word he produced a patent folding spyglass from his pocket and clapped it to his eye. Silver, who had been an interested witness to the scene from his perch atop of the cabin skylight, hopped across the deck to my great-uncle's side.

"Beggin' your pardon, captain," he said. "But I'd make oath that topsl is the canvas you took out o' the mogul's ship off Pondicherry. Mind it, sir? 'Twas uncommon bleached and looked whiter'n our cloth."

Murray handed him the glass.

"Stop me, Silver, but I believe you are right," he returned. "What a hawk's eye you must have! Here, see what you can make of it with this."

Long John peered through the glass, steadying his crutch against the butt of the mizzen.

"Aye, 'tis—"

"It'yal James to leeward!" hailed the foretop.

And the main crosstrees echoed, not to be outdone—

"Walrus comin' up astern o' her!"

"'Tis they, never a doubt," assented Silver as he lowered the glass. "Diggin' into it they are, too, and a lusty show o' canvas to both o' them. If you was to ask me now, captain, I'd say Flint isn't willing to plow your wake."

My great-uncle indulged in a pinch of snuff, a mildly cynical smile upon his handsome features.

"I thank you," he acknowledged. "And now I would have the men tumble up their gear from below and make ready the boats. I shall also leave it to you, Silver, to lay the powder-train. How much have you?"

"Three casks, sir."

"Excellent. But allow us ample time to get free."

"Why do you give your orders to Silver and not to Bones?" I inquired curiously after the one-legged man had gone for'ard.

My great-uncle lowered his glass with a benevolent smile.

"I rejoice to perceive that you have an observant tendency," he commented. "Why do I single out Silver for orders? Ah! The reasons are quite obvious. To begin with, he is gifted with a personality which enables him to secure the accomplishment of tasks; but perhaps as important as that consideration is the parallel fact that it lies to my interest to develop the seed of dissension in the Walrus' crew. Their future contains infinite possibilities. Who knows what trifling factor may influence the dictates of fate? I am, you may say, in a minority of one among some hundreds of headstrong, willful, intemperate men. United, they would crush me like a fly on the wall. Divided, and kept divided, they are so many instruments for the fulfilling of my desires. Wait until we are aboard the Royal James, Robert. Then you will realize what I offer you."

"I have heard much of it already," I agreed dryly.

"Anon you shall hear all," he answered. "Let us get Flint across-table from us in the James' state cabin with a beaker of rum at his elbow. Then you shall hear me talk."

Bones came up to speak to him; and I rejoined Peter, who was glumly watching the splashing of the small boats and the rigging of the falls by which they were slung overside.

As Murray nodded dismissal to Bones, Silver left us and hopped up to him.

"All set and ready below, captain," he announced.

My great-uncle cast his eye at the approaching ships, now so near that we could make out quite distinctly the contour of their hulls, painted yellow, with a white band delimiting the ports, man-o'-war fashion. The James was already beginning to take in some of her top canvas.

"Very good, Silver," he answered. "Master Bones! You will bring the ship to and put over the boats."

There was a great flapping and banging as the brig rounded to, and with much yo-heaving the boats were lowered into the water.

"You will go off first, Master Bones," ordered Murray. "Kindly present my compliments to Captain Flint and say that I should like to have a word with him aboard the James at his early convenience."

Bones sullenly touched his cap and led better than half the crew into one of the two longboats the brig had carried. Murray nodded to Silver as they cast off.

"Start your train," he said shortly. "Nephew Robert, I wish you and Peter to go into the second boat. At once, please!"

Peter and I climbed clumsily down the ladder of cleats nailed to the brig's hull and dropped into the bobbing longboat. Peter groaned as we crawled over the thwarts.

"Like der waves is my stomach—oop—andt down. Now I be sick, hu!"

And he was.

Presently Murray descended the brig's side with an agility which put me to shame and took his seat in the stern sheets. Darby swarmed down like a monkey and ensconced himself beside us in the bow. Silver was slung over in the bight of a rope, and the last of the crew tumbled over after him, one upon the other's heels. Oars were thrust out, and we pulled rapidly toward the Royal James, wallowing in the trough of the sea, a quarter-mile away. The Walrus, foaming up under a cloud of canvas, was almost as near, and on our weather board.

Boom! The roar of an explosion behind us was as sharp as the smack of an open hand. I turned my head. So did the others. Murray was looking back, too, and the rowers rested on their oars.

A cloud of smoke jetted up from the brig's hatches. She heeled over to starboard as we watched, gave a quivering lurch and commenced to slide under by the head. We could hear the slap of the sails as they struck the waves. In two minutes she was gone.

"That was well-contrived, Silver," remarked my great-uncle. "'Sdeath, but you are a man of parts. Give way, lads!"

He nodded the length of the boat to me.

"I trust you perceive the significance of that, Nephew Robert." A certain young man, we will say, disappears from New York. A certain brig disappears simultaneously. Some might go so far as to associate the two disappearances. Frigates put to sea in search of a certain brig—but the brig is no more."

The men at the oars laughed loudly, and I made no answer. What could I say? I felt very hopeless.

The bulwarks of the James were lined with heads and faces as we pulled under her counter and made fast, and even at that distance the complexity of her crew was apparent. I saw Portuguese, Finns, Scandinavians, French and English cheek by jowl with negroes, Moors, Indians and slant-eyed yellow men. But what impressed me the most was the absolute silence which greeted us, a silence all the more impressive because the wind carried to our ears the bedlam of shouts, cheers, oaths and imprecations with which the Walrus was receiving Bones' boat several hundred yards away.

Murray waved me to the ladder as he set foot on the first cleat.

"Up with you, Nephew! Peter also. The rest go to the Walrus."

Darby snatched at my hand as I rose.

"Whirra, whirra, but there's an ache in my heart to be parted from ye, Master Bob!" he cried. "And if we was to be pirates it do seem we might be together on the same ship!"

He made to follow me, indeed, but Silver pulled him back.

"You stays wi' us, Darby," growled the one-legged man. "Blast ye, lad, you're our good luck. Flint'll douse the ship in rum after one look at ye."

"We'll meet again, Darby," I said. "Never you fear."

He was still jabbering in a mixture of grief and joy when I climbed over the bulwark and dropped beside my great-uncle into the midst of another world.

Fore-and aft from poop to fo'csle stretched the wide deck from which the lofty spars rose like forest giants. The massive bulwarks were shoulder-high, and inboard everything was painted red exactly as in a king's ship. The hundreds of men who had watched us from the bulwarks had all sifted for'ard. We stood in the midst of an open space, with only three others.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS

By B. C. Mellencamp

What About Fertilizers

At this particular time of the season it is very important to think about what kind of fertilizers are necessary for the farm, what kinds to buy for different crop needs, and what the benefits will be. For the purpose of assistance is knowing what to buy and the various points to be considered, the following discussion of fertilizers is submitted.

Fertilizers are used to supply available and necesary plant food to the soil for growth and maturity of crops. Of the ten essential plant elements in crop production, only three are important considerations in Michigan, because the supply of nitrogen, phosphorus, and potash, in an available form are apt to be deficient in Michigan soils. Sometimes only one is the limiting factor. Sometimes all three are limiting.

In addition to the above mentioned three elements, the calcium or lime content is often deficient, especially in the carbonate form or limestone, as shown by acid soils. In many cases the correction of the lime content will be all that is necessary to harvest larger yields. All grain crops, truck and vegetable crops and especially legumnous crops are particularly benefited by the addition of limestone. Fortunately this county can get limestone from Petoskey at $1.00 per ton f. o. b. in carload lots in bulk, which is surely very reasonable. By all means test your soil for acidity, if acid the best fertlizer you can buy is this limestone and from one to two tons per acre will increase your yield from an almost failure to profitable production. A Soiltex outfit can be purchased for only twenty-five cents (25c) from the county agricultural agent and can be used in testing for acidity by any farmer. Get in touch with your neighbors and get orders for a carload, or see your Co-op. manager about lime.

The three different plant foods can be returned in the form of leguminous green manures, which adds nitrogen; in the form of barnyard manure, which adds all three; or in commercial fertilizer, which adds from one to three of these elements.

In buying fertilizer, the first consideration should be the crop to be fertilized; the next should be the soil with its supply of available nutrients; a third should be the soil management practices, including the use of lime, farm manures, green manures and crop rotations; and the fourth consideration, the analysis of the fertilizers. The latter means the ratio between nitrogen, phosphorus and potash.

Nearly all the soils can use a high percentage of phosporic acid, but the response to nitrogen and potash varies. The heavier soils contain larger amounts of nitrogen and potash than the lighter sandy soils. If a good system of soil management is followed, including the use of both barnyard and green manures, the nitrogen and potash are pretty well taken care of. Phosphoric acid is about all that will need to be added. On sandy lands very often all three ingredients are needed, particularly for potatoes, sugar beets, beans and truck crops. In nearly all cases however, the percentage of phosphoric acid should be highest.

Sufficient manure is not produced today to meet the plant food requirements. In one year, manure only returns 50 per cent of the nitrogen removed by the crop, 35 per cent of the phosphoric acid, and around 50 per cent of the potash. It is true that good good crop rotations, including the turning under of leguminous crops will take care of the nitorgen, but the other two will have to be returned in commercial fertilizer.

Nitrogen is called a one year fertilizer as usually succeeding crops do not gain much from its application, for it leaches very easily and is quickly used up. Nitrogen shows good results when soil is sweet, but not so much with acid soil conditions.

Potash is not a very important consideration where plenty of manure is available. However, it is very often advisable to use fertilizers carrying as high as 6 per cent potash on potatoes, sugar beets, beans, alfalfa, sweet clover and some of the other clovers.

Phosphoric acid is very important and should contain a higher percentage than potash, or of nitrogen for that matter. Phosphorus and potash are retained in the soil and furnish food for many succeeding crops, hence are reasonable to buy. Of the three plant elements, phosphorus in the form of acid phosphate will make the best dividend when only one element is used in the fertilizer.

When considering the analysis of fertilizers you must take into consideration the units of plant food present, the ratio of these units and the cost of each unit, remembering that one unit means one per cent par

For instance a 1-8-3 contains twelve units of plant food, a 3-12-4 contains 19 units and 16 per cent acid phosphate contains 16 units. The prices of these units remain about the same each year, or at least have for the last three years and are as follows: Nitrogen per unit as expressed in ammonia is $3.65; phosphoric acid 85c per unit and potash 80c per unit. This is on the mixed goods basis. So if you bought a 3-12-4 fertilizer the three units of nitrogen would be (3x$3.65) the 13 units of phosphorus (12x85c) and the 4 units of potash (4x80c). If nitrogen can be furnished in any other way than commercial fertilizer, that is the way to get it, as it is by far the highest of the three elements.

The highest analysis fertilizers are the cheapest per pound of plant food and should always be purchased in preference to fertilizers containing less than 14 total units. Last year, fertilizers that contained only 10 units of plant food cost the farmer on an average of $29.50 per ton or 14.7c per pound of plant food. 15 units of plant food cost $32.90 per ton or 10.9c per pound of plant food. 20 unit goods cost $39.95 per ton or 9.9c per pound of plant food. As the price per ton goes up the prices per pound of plant food went down, so be sure that you get high analysis fertilzers, as they are cheaper than the cheap fertilizers. A high analysis fertilizer is one that contains at least 14 units.

The buyer of commercial goods should learn to buy by analysis and use only highgrade goods. There are more different kinds of fertilizers

Who Pays?

You who believe advertising is too expensive to justify its returns, listen to this:

Twenty-eight years ago the makers of a watch produced a cumbersome but accurate article, priced $1.50. Without advertising, they sold that first year 12,000. The next year, with a little tentative advertising, they sold 87,000. Encouraged, they increased the factory and distribution, reduced the size of the watch, priced it $1.00, made a reasonable advertising appropriation—and sold 485,000.

When the makers of a famous camera began advertising thirty years ago, they made one camera which took a 2 1-2 inch picture, and sold at $25.00. In 1917, that time of the distressing upward trend of prices, these people made a better camera that sold for $10.00.

Who pays for the advertising? Or does the advertising pay for itself?

And what good advertising executed in attractive print did for the watch and the camera, it can do in some measure for your product.

Let us talk with you about the printing of your sales literature.

WHAT IS THIS GULF WATERWAY

men in the face of the apparent necessity of doing big and hitherto undesirable things to save and raise the lake levels may be obliged to swallow their objections.

The cost of the works proposed in the Warren report is estimated at $8,000,000 for the controlling works at the outlet of Lake Erie and $2,000,000 for the series of weirs in St. Clair river. The Chicago sanitary district has offered to bear a share of this cost.

Not So Easy as Appears

Seems easy in theory, this damming of the outlets of the big lakes to restore their levels. But in practice there are a lot of complications. The discharge of Lake Erie ice through Niagara river, for instance, presents a very serious difficulty. Jams are liable to flood large areas about Buffalo and work tremendous damage. There are also rapid fluctuations in the level of Lake Erie caused by the wind. The water is liable to come up several feet during a storm. These considerations led Engineer Richmond to favor permanent submerged weirs.

There is, too, a mighty volume of water going through these outlets. The mean flow of Lake Superior into St. Mary's river is 82,000 cubic feet per second, the maximum 130,000, and the minimum 60,000. The mean flow from Lake Huron into St. Clair river is 206,000 cubic feet per second, the maximum 271,000 and the minimum 136,000.

From Lake Erie through Niagara river the maximum discharged is 267,000 cubic feet and the minimum 153,000.

This volume and this range are difficult to control.

But that they can be controlled to a considerable degree and that human engineering can help in maintaining levels is given striking proof in the case of Lake Superior.

The outlet of Lake Superior is through St. Mary's river. Originally shoals and reefs in the river above St. Mary's fall or rapids furnished natural dams over which there were campartively shallow depths in low water. These shallows tended to check the outflow of Lake Superior when the inflow decreased.

Lake Superior Held Back

To make possible the passage of big freighters from Lake Huron to Lake Superior a channel 20 to 22 feet deep was dredged in St. Mary's river and locks and ship canals were built to carry the boats over 19-foot drop at the rapids.

Then power dams were built on either side of the river above the rapids and so much water was diverted for power purposes that the rapids were left practically dry. This would have caused a very serious drain upon Lake Superior, except for the fact that various obstructions were placed in the river to compensate for the diversion, including regulating works recently completed.

Now is it possible to utlize practically all the flow of St. Mary's river for navigation purposes and power. Very little trickles among the rocks of the rapids over which 10 years ago roared a tremendous volume of white water. At the same time it is possible to hold back the discharge from Lake Superior.

As a result Lake Superior, which has suffered more than the other lakes from lack of inflow during the past seven or eight years due to deficiency in rainfall and snowfall over its basin, has lowered much more slowly than Lakes Michigan and Huron. Not until the past year has it begun to drop below the low marks shown on the lake survey chart.

Engineers figured that the works in St. Mary's river could regulate the level of Lake Superior within a maximum range of 2.5 feet and ordinarily within a range of 1.5 feet, or between elevations 602.1 and 603.6 feet above sea level.

These calculations were based on normal inflow. But a power above man has ruled during the past seven years, cutting off the inflow, with the result that the mean level of Lake Superior has sunk to 600.87, or 1.23 feet below the minimum figured on.

Affair of Two Nations

When the inflow is withheld by nature the lake levels are bound to suffer unless the outflow is very radically checked. Any considerable checking of the outflow is a matter on which the United States and Canada will have to get together, just as they will have to get together on the construction of compensating works.

Lake Superior levels could be restored by a more strict cutrailment of the flow through the existing works. By reducing the outflow to less than the inflow the lake could be built up in a compartively short time.

But while Lake Superior was building up by shutting off outflow Lakes Huron and Michigan and all the other lakes and channels would be dropping still lower and would keep on dropping until the outflow from Lake Superior was increased.

Chicago Sanitary district engineers blame the Lake Superior regulating works at Sault Ste. Marie several inches of the loss in levels now suffered by Lakes Michigan and Huron.

Restoring lake levels by regulating works, thus appears to involve the necessity of beginning at the bottom and working up. Regulating works along the St. Lawrence, at the outlet of Lake Ontario at the outlet

VICKS VAPORUB

Lake Erie, and in St. Clair river, all working in harmony would be able to restore levels without any great injury, except possibly to power interests. And the principle already has been established that navigation interests and great lakes interests come above power interests.

Such an international system of regulating works would make it possible in extreme times, such as at present, to adjust the outflow of the lakes to the inflow, limiting diversions where necessary, both in the case of diversions for power.

In view of this situation and the necessity of settling the lake levels matter in a big way it would appear short-sighted for congress to authorize now any definite diversion at Chicago. After the lake levels have been restored, it may be possible to give Chicago all the water it needs for sanitation and to give the lakes-to-gulf waterway all the water it needs for navigation without damage to great lakes interests. But that possibly is still distant.

Dam in St. Lawrence

Further evidence that checks on outflow will help restore lake levels is furnished by the Gut dam in the St. Lawrence river above the Galops rapids and by the effects of ice at the outlet of Lake Huron. The Gut dam built in 1903, has helped materially to maintain the level of Lake Ontario in spite of the Chicago diversion and the lack of inflow due to natural reasons.

Engineer W. S. Richmond points out in the Warren report that ice in the St. Clair and Detroit rivers produces an average retardation of flow from Lake Huron of 10,000 c. f. s. for the year—as much as Chicago wants to take out of the lakes. This retardation operates from December to May, except in mild winters, when the lakes lose the effects of the natural storage.

It might be possible, with proper regulating works, to hold back the flow from the great lakes in the months when navigation is closed, to build them up for the summer. As a matter of fact, the lakes are at their lowest in January and February each year and from then usually rise to their highest levels in July and August.

Chicago needs its greatest diversion for sanitation purposes in the summer months and early fall, while the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway would need its chief diversion for navigation purposes from July until December.

That Sixth Grade Lake

Another and magnificent plan has been suggested for restoring lake levels. This is the creation of a sixth great lake, more than twice as large as Ontario, up in the wilderness north of Lake Superior, known as the Patricia region, and using it as a feeder for Lake Superior and all the other lakes.

This plan comes from the brain of a Canadian engineer, Lorne Campbell of Toronto, who has recently completed a five year exploration of the Patricia country. Up there he found a natural basin waiting to be converted in to a huge lake. This is the basin of the Albany river. The Albany now flows into Hudson bay, mingling its fresh water with the salt seas of the north.

Mr. Campbell points out that the Albany basin lies between two heights of land running east and west. These divides converge at the eastern and western ends. The Albany is the "neck of the bottle through which the waters make egress." He proposes to stop the flow of the Albany by means of a great dam and to build another dam across the Ogoki river, one of the Albany's tributaries. The water would then be stored up in a reservoir covering 15,000 square miles.

The divide between this basin and the great lakes is less than a mile across, says Mr. Campbell. He would build a canal through the divide and divert water from the new great lake to Lake Superior by means of Lake Nipigon and Nipigon river.

The cost of this huge project is estimated by Mr. Campbell as between $150,000,000 and $200,000,000. He points out that as an investment it would more than pay for itself in increased water power all along the great lakes system and in benefits to navigation. He suggests that the United States and Canada get together on the project.

Climatic conditions may return to normal this year. Lake levels may begin to come back. On the other hand the climatic disturbance may be due to causes that involve a slow comeback, such as the destruction of northern forests. They may be due, also to the cutting away of southern forests which have acted as relay stations in passing on to the great lakes area rainfalls which had their origins moisture evaporated from the Gulf of Mexico.

At any rate the regulation of lake levels is now a big issue between Canada and the United States—an issue that would only be complicated by congressional authorization of a fixed diversion of 10,000 cubic feet per second at Chicago.

The next article, which concludes this series, has for its subject, "Should the lake states be for or against the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway?" It will sum up the situation as regards diversion at Chicago and the matter of congressional action on the desired 10,000 cubic feet per second authorization.

Canadian Ravens Are Nuisance to Loggers

The loggers of the North woods of Ontario have no love for the raven as a companion in their work, according to the experience of Mr. Charles Macnamara, who writes from Arnprior about this bird to Natural History magazine. "The French-Canadian shantymen say that he calls poche, poche, referring to the bag in which they carry their midday meal. If the "poche" is not hidden under a stump or buried deep in the snow while the log-makers are at work, the raven is very likely to tear it open with his powerful bill and eat the men's lunch of bread and pork. I set out one winter day from a lumber depot to walk to a camp a few miles distant. The road through the forest forked several times, and after a while it dawned on me that I had taken a wrong turning, for there was no sign of the camp, and I had already walked more than its distance from the depot. Just then I heard a small, hoarse dog barking a little way ahead. There, I thought, is a gang of log-makers who have a dog with them. I shall get my directions from them. But 'the small, hoarse dog' was a stately raven who made no more obeisance to me than his famous ancestor did to Edgar Allan Poe."

If strawberry plants are thoroughly cultivated and fertilized in the fall and mulched heavily with partly decomposed straw or leaves, the moisture will be conserved and the plant will suffer little even during a protracted drought. This is essential because the strawberry crop is nearly always injured by a drought occurring just about the time the berries begin to ripen, states C. C. Newtonn, chief of the horticulture division at Clemson college.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS

By B. C. Mellencamp

than one can imagine in Michigan today, but there are only 14 standard analysis, which are: 2-12-2, 2-16-2, 2-12-6, 0-12-6, 3-12-4, 4-12-0, 4-8-6, 2-8-16, 0-12-12, 0-8-24, acid sulphate of ammonia and muriate of potash. These will meet the requirements of any system of farming in Michigan.

Almost every farm presents an individual problem, but in general the 2-12-2 and 2-16-2 are used for all grain crops and sometime beans and beets. The 2-12-6 or 0-12-6 are used on grain when alfalfa or sweet clover is seeded with it, as these two legumes thive on a higher potash content. The 3-12-4, 2-12-6, 4-8-6, or 0-16-0 are good for potatoes, beets, beans, etc. The 4-8-6 is chiefly used on truck crops. The 2-8-16, 0-12-12, and 0-8-24 are used on muck soils. Many times acid phosphate is used alone with fine results. No certain rule can be laid down, but in general using these analysis, you cannot go far wrong.

Your agent has several copies of a fertilizer bulletin, which gives the fertilizer recommendations for all soils and crops and other information that will help you with your problems. Merely send your name and address and one will be forwarded to you.

As a summary of points:

1. Buy fertilizer by analysis and not by Brand name.
2. Buy only high analysis goods, they are cheaper per unit plant food.
3. Insist on high percentage of phosphorus.
4. Buy nitrogen only when it cannot be supplied by manures and legumes.
5. High potash is not essential. See that phosphroic acid is higher than potash.
6. But only fertilizers that are mixed properly for the particular crop or crops.

A GREAT VESPER SERVICE

M. E. CHURCH CROWDED TO CAPACITY SUNDAY

Program of Music, Sermon and Pageant, "Building the King's Highway" Enjoyed

Another very successful monthly vesper service was carried out last Sunday afternoon at the Methodist Episcopal church.

The theme was "Discovering the World." Several very interesting features held the attention of a crowded church of people for the entire vesper period. Among them should be mentioned the instrumental music; the prayer hyma in which the entire company participated; a vocal solo, "O Divine Redeemer," excellently sung by Mrs. Ira Adams; a sermon on the subject, "Discovering the World;" two special songs by "The Mothers' Jewels," about twenty little people of the missionary department of the church; and the wonderful pageant, "Building the King's Highway," given by about forty people of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society.

In his sermon, the pastor said that the general editor of the Methodist Episcopal Advocate makes the statement that the three most noteworthy ships of history were Noah's Ark, the Mayflower and the prairie schooner. A point of similarity in each of these is that each carried the best of the old world over into the new. The pastor stated that the church should be included in this list of ships, because it also carries the best of the past over into the new worlds it is discovering. He insisted that world discovery is a process rather than an event. He maintained that the church is seeking to discover a united world, a sober world, an intelligent world and a Christian world. He congratulated the Women's Missionary Societies on the fact that they are helping to find these better worlds for human society.

The climax of the afternoon's program was the pageant. It was well rendered and reflected great credit upon Mrs. Adah Beeman and her loyal assistants who had it in charge. It was a telling moment when the great founders and leaders of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, who were impersonated by members of the local society, were introduced to the church of today. Their quaint costumes of the olden times, and the historic allusions to their sacrificial lives and valuable service to the world, were matters of more than passing interest.

If we were back in the 17th century no doubt we would be content to live in a log cabin like our great grandfathers, but as we are living in the 20th century we want 20th century surroundings. That means the best of furnishings, decorations, etc.

NEU-TONE; the artistic, sanitary, washable, flat wall finish, is distinctly a 20th century finish. Put on in attractive combinations with a stencil border it is the de-lux yet inexpensive method of decorating the home.

If you have been depending on the out of date wall paper, kalsomine, or water color method it would be well for you to drop in and see how much more decorative and modern you can make your home, at less cost, by using Neu-Tone.

We have a full line of color samples and stencil designs, so that you can get a complete understanding of the possibilities of improvement on your present decorations.

balanced in every particular and the thought was expressed many times that they might have won out in class C had they elected to enter.

Harbor Third Place

The next game, for third place in class C, between Harbor and Mancelona, was a real contest. Harbor set a pace from the start that was not to be denied, wining by a score of 37 to 16.

Class C Final

For the championship in class C, Boyne City upset the dope and won from East Jordan 22 to 20. The winning two points for Boyne were contributed by one sympathetic East Jordan player, who as the second half of the game opened, received the ball, dribbled to Boyne's goal and neatly caged the ball, without any interference from Boyne. Referee Crane ruled that the goal counted for Boyne.

C. D. Crane of Caro and Walter MacMillan of Petoskey, ably refereed the games and proved themselves very efficient officials. Pellston and St. Ignace will represent class D and Boyne City, East Jordan and Harbor Springs class C at the Petoskey tournament this week.

WELL PLANNED SURPRISE PARTY GIVEN

Mrs. Raymond Seymour Honored on Birthday Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. William Brodia gave a well planned surprise party last Saturday evening at their home, in honor of Mrs. Raymond Seymour's birthday anniversary.

About forty of their friends were present, all of whom enjoyed a pleasant evening of dancing. At midnight a delicious lunch was served, a feature of which was a large birthday cake adorned with 32 candles.

Mrs. Seymour received many fine and useful gifts from her friends to remind her of the occasion, everyone leaving at a late hour wishing her many more happy birthdays.

W. C. T. U. MET WITH MRS. H. S. HARSHA

Mrs. S. J. Alcox, Honorary President, Given Fine Gift

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union met last Friday afternoon at Mrs. Harshu's with about thirty in tatendance.

Several new members were received and plans made for continuing the membership campaign until the May meeting on an enlarged scale.

A short biography of Neil Dow, the father of prohibition was read by Mrs. Rinehart.

In the absence from the city of the leader scheduled for the day, the June topic was substituted, namely, "The Common Defense and the General Welfare."

The leader, Mrs. A. J. Usher, called for readings on the National Defense Act and the Shephard-Towner bill, and followed these with an instructive paper, using as sub-topics the World Court, needed prohibition legislation, the opium question, the educational bill, deportation of undesirable aliens and national film censorship.

Refreshments were served by the social department, including a fine cake prepared in honor of the birthday of Mrs. S. J. Alcox, honorary president. To the regret of all, Mrs. Alcox was ill and unable to be present, so a liberal serving was carried to her home, also a beautiful black silk dress pattern, as a gift from the Union. The remembrance was very much appreciated by the dear lady who was for so many years the leader in the work, an who still retains her interest.

The April meeting of the Union will be held with Mrs. S. A. Correll.

PEACH TREE BORER DOES MUCH DAMAGE

It would be hard to find a five-year-old peach tree anywhere in Illinois that has not been injured by the peach tree borer, according to S. C. Chandler, assistant entomologist of the natural history survey at the University of Illinois. Fortunately, this pest, which is one of the worst insect enemies of peach trees, can be kept in check by the use of paradichlorobenzene, a new chemical control for borers. The borers always pass the winter in the inner bark of peach trees as pale, white worms from one-fourth to half an inch long. These worms can be found from ten inches above to six inches below the ground, but are most abundant just below the surface. Their presence in a tree is indicated by masses of gum mixed with brown grass or sawdust coming from the injured trunk.

Half an ounce of paradichlorobenzene, or P. D. B., as it is commonly called, is enough for each tree between one and three years old. Trees from four to five years old should each get three-fourths of an ounce, and trees from six to ten years old a full ounce. Trees that have not grown one full season should not be treated at all. The amount of P. D. B. to be used for a tree should never be guessed, but should be measured out in a mensuring cup.

Before the P. D. B. is applied, the grass, weeds and excess masses of gum should be scraped away from the base of the trees, but care should be taken not to scrape away so much earth that the chemical will be below the burrow entrances of the borers. The P. D. B. should be spread on the ground in a band an inch or two wide and about an inch away from the trunk of the tree at all points. The chemical should not touch the tree. Four or five spadefuls of earth are put over the band of P. D. B. and firmed down with the back of the spade.

No trees have been killed in Illinois when the methods just outlined were followed, but there have been some losses when the P. D. B. was applied so close to the trees that it touched the bark. Trees have been killed in other states under different soil and weather conditions, but five years of experiments made by the natural history survey indicate that the chemical is relatively safe.

Prune Raspberry Bushes After Fruiting Season

After the fruiting season is over the raspberry canes that have borne fruit should be cut. This may be done at any time from the end of harvest in late summer up to the annual spring fruiting, but the best time is as soon as possible after the crop is off. The fruit of the next season is borne on the new canes.

The advantages in cutting out the old canes are that they are out of the way of the young growth and that the spread of the diseases and insects harbored in them is prevented. The young canes that are weak or diseased should also be taken out at the same time.

The canes of black raspberries are usually headed back in the spring by pinching off the tips when the cane has reached a desirable height. This encourages side branching and a larger fruiting area. Red raspberries are usually allowed to grow unchecked as they do not produce strong side branches as in the case of the black raspberries.

Horticulture Facts

Continue to spray potatoes, celery and fall strawberries until they are ready for harvest. Cultivation around small fruits should cease.

Bitter rot of apples may be controlled by liberal applications of bordeaux mixture, applied in a mistlike spray. In orchards particularly severely infected it may be necessary to spray with bordeaux about forty days after the petals have fallen and make three additional applications of bordeaux at intervals of two weeks.

* * *

Black rot disease of grapes shows up on the leaves as nearly circular, brown spots which are sharply defined. Bordeaux mixture is the control. The first spray should be applied just as the buds are swelling in the early spring. The next application should be made as the buds unfold, and afterward spray the vines about every two weeks until five or six applications have been made.

* * *

High yields require good stands and good stands may be best secured with good seed. Even better seed must be of an adapted variety if maximum yields are expected.

* * *

Just what crop to use as an orchard covering depends upon local circumstances. It is believed that oats sown about the first of August make the best cover crop for the farm orchard. The cover crop must germinate well and make heavy growth during the fall and also stand up sufficiently to hold the leaves and snow.

CHARLEVOIX GIRL WINNER OF PRIZE

Wins in Word Contest of Over 8,000 Boys and Girls

Lillian Manley, 14-year old girl of Charlevoix, Mich., is one of the prize winners in the word contest conducted by the Blue Valley Creamery company. Over 8,000 boys and girls participated in this novel contest.

The aim of the contest, which closed on Januury 15, was to discover how many English words, excluding proper names, could be made from the words "Blue Valley Creamery Company." Miss Munley was dilligent enough to compile a list of 1,326 words.

The grand prize of fifty dollars went to Myrtle Farnburg, of Fargo, N. D., who had 2,968 words. The second prize of twenty-five dollars was paid to Lella L. Brown, of Oakford, Illinois, who had 2,930 words; and the third prize of fifteen dollars went to Helen J. Minnis, of Sharpsburg, Illinois, who found 2,821 words. The fourth prize of ten dollars was won by David C. Overman, of Charlottesville, Indiana.

PAVE GAP IN M-11 DURING 1926

SUCH IS HIGHWAY PROGRAM FOR THIS SUMMER

Route to Be Paved is From Benzie County Line to Traverse City, Some 20 Miles

A tentative highway program for 1926, contemplating hard surface construction on many important arteries and designed to interfere as little as possible with summer tourist traffic, is being shaped by Highway Commissioner Frank Rogers and G. C. Dillman, deputy commissioner.

It will be presented to Gov. Groesbeek and the state administrative board for approval probably in April.

The department plans to extend the pavement on M-11, the West Michigan pike, to Traverse City, according to Mr. Dillmnn. This route now is paved from the state line to near Benzonia. The gap to be closed is about 20 miles and when it is completed there will be a solid paved highway from Chicago up to the Lake Michigan coast as far as Traverse City.

Gnps between Grand Rapids and Kalamazoo on M-13, the Mackinaw trail, are to be closed, according to the highway plans, making this highwny solid pavement from Cedar Springs south to the state line. This will mean the surfncing with concrete of about 14 miles in Allegan county.

On M-10, the Dixie highway, the pavement is to he pushed 12 or 14 miles north from Pinconning, according to present plans.

In order to avoid bad detours around the proposed improvements in the northern resort country, such as that from Benzonia to Traverse City on M-11, work mny not be started until September. This would leave the route open during most of the summer.

The improvement contemplnted on M-11 covers that part of the route asked and recommended by M-11 boosters at their meeting in Traverse City last fall. Cement construction north of Traverse City is expected to follow in 1927.

TIGHTEN LAWS ON BRUSH FIRES

MUST HAVE PERMIT TO START FIRES ANYWHERE

Farmers and Lumbermen Urged to Comply With Ruling of State Conservation Commission

Fire wardens are busy these days informing farmers and lumbermen with regards to laws covering brush fires, which in so many instances in the past have resulted in heavy loss both to those who started them and to adjacent property owners.

The rulings laid down by the State Conservation Commission are very drastic and from information given us by firewarden Deuell of Boyne City, we believe this season the laws will be more strictly enforced than in the past. Devastating forest and brush fires not only affect the owners of timber but indirectly every business interest and property owner in the state. The people of the state of Michigan are fully awake to the situation and are backing the Conservation Commission in the enforcement of their rulings.

Below we reproduce Section 7 of the Michigan Forest Fire law. This section covers the brush fire situation and penalties. Read is carefully:

"It shall be unlawful when the ground is not snow covered to start or have any open fire except for domestic purposes and to protect persons or property in case of fire, without the written permission of the Conservation Commission or other authorized conservation officer or supervisor of a township or some other elective officer designated by said supervisor, unless a fire break sufficient to check the spread of such fire shall have been freshly made or plowed around the area wherein said fire is set. Permission to set fire to any woods, grass lands, brush or slash for the purpose of clearing and improving lands or for preventing other fires shall be given whenever the same may be safely burned upon such reasonable conditions and restrictions as the Conservation Commission may prescribe to prevent spreading and getting beyond control. Such permission shall be in the form of a written permit on blanks to be furnished by the Department of Conservation and such permit may be revoked in the discretion of the said Conservation Commission in cases of extreme danger when such act is clearly necessary for the safety of life and property: Provided, That railroad companies and road contractors when burning large areas under such permit shall have some competent person constantly in charge of such fires, so as to prevent the spreading thereof. Any person or corporation violating any provision of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars or by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than ninety days, or both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court."

Secure permits from conservation officers up to May 1. After this date they may be procured from supervisors of each township or conservation officers.

The Baptist Ladies' Aid will hold an Easter supper in the church parlors, Wednesdny evening, March 31 Price 50c. 5:30 until all are served. —Adv. 12t1.

WHAT IS THIS GULF WATERWAY

ILLINOIS PLAN OF BIG CONERN TO ALL MICHIGAN

Lowering of Lakes Level By Chicago Drainage Caoal Covered in Series of Articles

No. 12.
(By Arthur W. Stace.)

Should the great lnkes he for or against the Lakes-to-the-Gulf waterway project?

Let's array some of the leading facts brought out in this series of articles and take a thoughtful look at them before trying to answer.

ON THE ONE SIDE—

The Lakes-to-the-Gulf waterway is designed for barge transportation although it is commonly referred to as a "deep waterway."

It is an eight-foot channel project on existing plans, which could be increased to a nine-foot depth by dredging or by taking full 10,000 cubic feet per second diversion from Lake Michignn.

The Chicago drainage cunal furnishes the first complete link, from Lake Michigan to Lockport, Ill., 38 miles. This part is a real ship canal, 24 feet deep.

From Lockport to Utica, 60 miles, the state of Illinois is building a $20,000,000 eight-foot waterway, which engineers sny can he finished in four years unless delayed by politics.

From Utica to LaSalle, seven miles, is an unimproved strip of river which the federal government could easily deepen to an eight-foot minimum.

From LaSalle to the Mississippi, 227 miles, the government maintains a seven-foot chnnnel, which ordinarily is much deeper than that.

From the mouth of the Illinois nt Grafton to St. Louis, 36 miles, the government maintains a six-foot channel which ordinarily is deeper than that and which could be increased to eight feet by dredging.

From St. Louis to Cairo, 183 miles, the government maintains an eight-foot chnnnel.

From Cairo to New Orleans, 1,063 miles, the government maintains a nine-foot channel.

Advise Eight-Foot Waterway

Government engineers advise an eight-foot channel from Utica to St. Louis as the wisest improvement investment, pointing out that with this depth a practical test can be given of the commercial value of the waterway, and if growing business later demands a nine-foot channel this can be secured by additional dredging or by diversion of full 10,000 cubic feet per second from Lake Michigan.

Mississippi river navigation below St. Louis, which was ruined hy railroad competition, is now being revived through the use of a new type of large capncity barges which are operated in fleets.

The federal barge, the Mississippi-Warrior service, hns been operating between St. Louis and New Orleans for six years, building up an increasing business which this past year reached close to 1,000,0000 tons of freight and netted a profit of around $350,000—the first big profit the line has shown.

Barges such as those in the Mississippi-Warrior service will be able to operate in an eight-foot minimum channel, as demonstrated in the stretch between St. Louis and Cairo.

Mississippi-Warrior service officers figure they saved shippers $1,400,000 in freight rates this past year, though shipments from Chicago were obliged to go to St. Louis or Cairo by rail and thence to New Orleans by barge. This saving, it is claimed, was spread over a considerable area, including Michigan and Wisconsin, but with Illinois and Chicago receiving the bulk of it. They assert the tonnage and the saving will be many times greater when through all-water service can be provided between Chicago and New Orleans.

Lake boats will not be able to navigate the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway and the waterway barges will not be safe in the rough waters of Lake Michignn, so trans-shipment will be necessary at Chicago for freight destined to or from great lakes points.

Raw materials coming up from the south form a big part of the northbound shipments—which tax the capacity of the Mississippi- War-

CROPS TO PLANT IS A PROBLEM

THAT CONFRONTS EVERY FARMER THIS SPRING

Some Favor Cash Crops While Others Follow Certain Rotation Closely

What crops to plant is a problem that confronts every farmer in the spring of the year. Some maintain a certain rotation quite closely in the successive seasons, others devote a certain fixed acreage to the various cash crops each year, while many others are influenced or guided by the prices obtained for the crops of the previous season. The annual report issued in March of each year by the U. S. Bureau of Agricultural Economics in cooperation with various state agricultural agencies on intentions to plant indicates the general trend of what farmers expect to do but is not intended as a forecast of what they will netually plant. It is merely to supply information to those who are in doubt and aid them in determining the proper course to pursue in avoiding abnormal increases or decreases in the acreage of any crop.

The report for this season, issued hy the Michigan Cooperative Crop Reporting Service indicates that Michigan farmers are planning an increase of nbout 30 per cent in spring wheat, one per cent in corn, and seven per cent in oats; a decrease of two per cent in hay and ten per cent in barley, and no change from last year in potatoes. Some of these changes will depend upon the amount of fall-sown wheat which it is found necessary to nbandon, and, of course, all changes will be more or less dependent upon prevailing weather and planting conditions. No inquiry was made concerning beans or sugar beets but reporters' comments indicate that both of these crops will suffer some loss of acreage.

For the North Central group of states, the indicated percentages of last year's acreages to be planted are as follows: Spring wheat, 101.4; corn, 99.1; oats, 101.9; barley, 105.8; sweet potatoes, 104.5; flaxseed, 101.6; grain sorghums, 105.2; tobacco, 97.0; hay, 100.2.

For the United States, the corresponding percentages are: Spring wheat, 98.2; corn, 99.9; oats, 104.6; barley, 105.7; potatoes, 104.3; sweet potatoes, 119.6; flaxseed, 100.4; grain sorghums, 98.3; tobacco, 99.4; peanuts, 92.0; rice, 101.4; and hay, 100.7.

CANNING FACTORY FOR EAST JORDAN

LONG CHERISHED DREAM NOW A REALITY

Will Mean Added Revenue for Farmers, Gardners and Townspeople—Location Near Flooring Plant

East Jordan is to have a canning factory. A long cherished dream is now a reality. The Courier extends congratulations to our neighboring city. We here at home have long wanted an institution of this kind. We believe it would greatly help us as it will East Jordan. But we will cover our disappointment and extend our best wishes to the little city at the head of the lake. The Herald in its last issue tells of the organization and we publish the article, as it appears as follows

The much-discussed Canning Factory for East Jordan, which has been under consideration for some time past, came to fruition last Friday, March 12th, when final steps were taken toward organization.

East Jordan's newest industry—The East Jordan Canning Company—has been organized under the corporation laws of Michigan, with the following officers:

President—W. P. Porter.
Vice-President—W. A. Strobel.
Treasurer—George Carr.
Secretary—R. C. Supernaw.
Additional Directors—James Votruba and Howard Morgan.

All the officers and directors are business men of East Jordan with the exception of Mr. Morgan, who is of Traverse City.

Will Outline Program

A meeting of the officers and directors will be held in the near future when many important details will be arranged. The location of the plant will probably be near the East Jordan Flooring Plant as the East Jordan & Southern Railroad has adequate switching facilities in that section.

It is planned to start building operations as soon as the weather permits. The necessary machinery for the opening operations of the plant will probably be purchased in the near future.

It is the present plan of the East Jordan Canning Company to be in operation by mid-summer. Fruits and vegetables—it is thought now, cherries and string beans will have their first consideration. However, as yet, no definite policy has been decided upon. The whole thing evolves upon the question of just what suitable machinery may be obtained to handle the various products in an economical manner.

Growers to Co-operate

Since the proposed canning factory began to receive tangible form, The Herald has heard many kindly remarks by the produce and fruit growers of this region. They are a unit in wanting such an institution. Those interested in furnishing products for the East Jordan Canning Company should get in touch with the newly-elected secretary, R. C. Supernaw, so that when it is finally decided upon as to just what will be handled the first year, contract blanks will be mailed them. East Jordan is in the heart of one of the finest agricultural districts of Michigan, and a canning factory means much to the prosperity of our farmers, gardeners, fruit growers, and our citizens in general.

Culmination of a Dream

Since The Herald publisher came to East Jordan over twenty years ago, the matter of a canning factory for this region has come up many times. Several times it appeared as about culminated, but, owing to untoward circumstances, the project failed.

During those years, The Herald has been assured by competent men in the canning industry that no place in Michigan offered a better place for a canning factory than East Jordan, for it is surrounded by the most fertile farming lands in Michigan.

Today the Canning Factory IS A REALITY. There can be no question as to its ultimate success—the farmers, the gardeners, the investors in the plant, the wage-earner required in the operation of the plant, and our citizens in general will one and all receive their share of this new prosperity.

One of those fellows was a very small old man with weeping gray hair and doggy bronzed face from which his eyes peered intensely blue and child-like. His shipmate, the last gold Spain in his ears, and his dress was neat and quiet.

"My surgeon, sir," he greeted Murray. "She's a comfort, I know—it proves if we've lost so many men as a—a genuine wind sither the—hussy here away from Ar-off the Horn."

The effect of the disagreeable blasphemies which peered with mild ingenuation from his lips was rich enough, but nobody appeared to notice it, and I learned afterward that his habit of swearing by the anatomy of the twelve apostles and various saints and sacred figures was the quaintest of several quaint characteristics of an unusual personality.

"We won't complain about that, Master Martin," replied my great-uncle. "I have brought back my grand-nephew to be the task-stay of my old age. Here he is. Master Ormerod Martin. Ah and this is a friend of his and an old enemy of mine, Peter Corliner," as Peter rolled over the top of the bulwarks. "He is one to be reckoned with, I can you might suppose is Peter."

"Master Martin, Nephew Robert, is my mate, and as such my right hand and arm."

Martin stepped back, and the second of the three men confronting us touched his cap. This was a square heavy-built fellow with a dour glint to his eye who wore a decent blue cloth coat and small clothes.

"And here is Saunders, Master Martin's second," continued my great-uncle. "A Scot like myself. My nephew should make a fine Scotsman; eh, Saunders?"

"He's a braw-lookin' laddie—in seemin'," Saunders agreed cautiously.

"Your meaning is that we must prove him?" responded Murray. "Quite true. We shall. Hola, Gunn, man!"

And he rattled off a string of French which I could not follow as the third man met him with a bow and a scrape of one foot. Gunpean was as brutal in looks and manner as Black Dog or Bill Bones, but without the sinister implications of speech and action that made me shudder whenever the blind man Pew approached me or spoke in my hearing. He had been branded on the cheek, and an attempt to obliterate the brand—or perhaps 'twas the superimposed scar of a wound—had made that side of his face a very nightmare. His wrists and forearms showed gouges that wound upward like snakes and suggested what other torments his gaudy clothing concealed.

"Coumeu," remarked my great-uncle, turning again to me, "is our gunner. I saved him from the French galleys, and he is not without devotion tinged by self-interest which is to be preferred above all.

"And now we will go aft and prepare to receive Captain Flint."

Murray led us to a door in the break of the poop which was opened for us by a stalwart black in a red livery coat, who ushered us along a companionway lined with stateroom doors into a spacious state cabin stretching the width of the stern. The walls were paneled in mahogany; silver sconces were fastened at intervals, and a wondrous luster chandelier was pendant from the ceiling, itself uncommonly lofty for shipboard; several paintings in the French school hung at the sides; and there were trophies of peculiar arms and armor. Underfoot were Eastern rugs, thick-piled and soft of hue.

My great-uncle surveyed this magnificence with pardonable pride. 'Twas evident it meant something to him.

"Diomede," he said to the negro, "where is Master Gunn?"

A high, piping voice answered him from the companionway.

"Coming, worshipful sir. Ben Gunn's a-coming. I jest stopped by the galley to fetch up your chocolate."

The man who followed the voice trotted in bearing a silver pitcher of steaming chocolate, Murray's favorite drink; aye, and food. He was a slender fellow, with a simple, open face, clad in plain black as became an upper servant. He stopped dead at sight of us.

"Set your tray on the table, Gunn," instructed my great-uncle. "This is my grandnephew, Master Ormerod, and his friend, Master Corliner. They are to sail with us a while."

Gunn pulled his forelock and ducked.

"Sarvant, gentlemen," he acknowledged. "Allus glad to please, is Ben Gunn. Bound to oblige ye, gentlemen. You jest name your drinks, and I'll fetch 'em up from the wine-bins."

"Food as well, Gunn," said Murray. "And Captain Flint is coming aboard."

Ben Gunn cocked his head one side.

"That means rum," he commented. "Plenty o' rum, says you. Jest leave it to Ben, captain."

He dipped and scraped as an afterthought, and skipped out the door with a look of wonder at us over his shoulders.

My great-uncle chuckled and rubbed his hands.

"The rum is a matter of the first importance," he explained. "Flint is a drunkard, and it is for the very reason that he has a weakness that I have brought him here. He is more valuable to us drunk than the most intelligent member of the crew."

He broke off.

"This is quite to be the most well-bred of Peter's Adventures," he observed. "Exactly—out of print. Robert, I never permit a certain heat me to blood. If you possess the p and the interest them, it is the most action at my officers can show you, as observe. I believe that there's not an independent—not much as a—on them. Aye, and if you do a clever nephew, Robert the Boy [illegible] yourself at [illegible] Peter ex- cept, of course. I will ask you to [illegible] out to the [illegible] I, [illegible] make a present of him to [illegible] must have [illegible] crew who [illegible] equally capable with [illegible]."

"I am not [illegible] regarded with [illegible] by my [illegible]. And on the whole, I think I have gotten along better by means of fear than I might have by means of affection. Fear is a natural element in a pirate's career. What place has he in his life for affections? Hark! Do I hear sounds?"

He did beyond question an uproar of curses and shouts upon the deck outside.

"It is only that Captain Flint has come aboard. Pray take your seats. I promise you an interesting episode."

The door to the deck banged open, and a harsh, domineering voice bellowed in the companionway.

"—some, Murray, what the— — — — — — dave think ye are? By the— — — — — ye lousy, slack-bellied swab, ye rack us—"

"Stow that, ye — — — — and ogy for a — — — — —," interrupted Martin mildly from the deck. "Why, any — — — would ha had more sense than you!"

"Like —! I'm my own master, I am. I—"

"Ye may be when ye stand on the Walrus' deck, but here you're only another — — — — as doesn't know better'n to veer after—".

"Belay for a — — — lackey, ye slab-faced chunk o' rotted sea-horse! I'll talk to your master!"

Slam went the door, and a mutter of curses rambled from the companionway, preceding a tall, blue-jowled man in a flaming red coat all cobwebbed over with gold lace. He halted in the cabin entrance, hands on his hips, feet planted wide, close-set green eyes flickering balefully on either side of a long nose that seemed to poke out from a tangle of lank, black hair.

"Back, eh, Murray?" he snarled. "Two men the richer for your effort. Gut me, 'twas a fool's errand!"

"Pardon me," objected Murray, "but I am considerably more than 'two men the richer' in consequence of my run ashore—although I would not appear by these words to deprecate the importance to be attached to the acquisition of my grandnephew and Master Corliner. Permit me, Captain Flint! Master Ormerod, my grandnephew, and Peter Corliaer."

Flint scowled at us, flinging himself into a chair at the opposite end of the table from my great-uncle.

"A youth and a fat man!" he ejaculated. "And unwilling at that, so Bones tells me."

"Master Bones was correct in that statement," my great-uncle assented cheerfully; "but I fancy he neglected to add that the 'fat man' took his knife away from him and must have hanged him had I not intervened."

An appreciable degree of respect dawned in Flint's eyes.

"He is no butter-tub if he bested Bill," conceded the Walrus' captain. "Curse me, though, if I see why you should add a cub to your crew."

"Tut, tut, captain," remonstrated Murray. "'A cub!' Think again. The boy is my heir."

"All he'll fall heir to will be the rope that hung you," returned Flint. "But I'll own I did you wrong when I accused you of being but two men the better by your shore expedition. I was forgetting the red-headed mascot John Silver fetched aboard. 'Tis the first promise o' luck we ha' had!"

My uncle took snuff with much delicacy and rang a silver bell in front of him.

"Gunn is late with the liquor. I must ask your indulgence, captain, for compelling you to talk dry."

Flint made a patent attempt to stare him down, but abandoned the effort and looked away.

"Some might say one thing and some another," he muttered.

"To whom do you owe your present position, Flint?" repeated Murray.

"Oh, to you, most like," admitted Flint. "Blast you!"

"Have I ever led you into difficulties?" continued my great-uncle.

"Not if—"

"Have I ever led you into difficulties?"

"No."

"Have we failed in any important venture since our association began?"

"You ha' a head on your shoulders," conceded Flint.

"And you have not," amended Murray. "No, do not say any more. You are an excellent man to handle your ship, Flint. And as fearless as any of our ruffians; but you are no more capable of looking ahead a week or two than Ben Gunn."

"Well, what would you?" Flint flung at him with an air of defiance, which Murray ignored.

"I would make the greatest coup we have attempted."

Flint laughed disagreeably.

"So you said when you arranged to go into New York, but you have carried back no treasure with you."

My uncle regarded him with what, under other circumstances, I should describe as honest indignation.

"You fool!" he said with a rasp in his voice—and I did not wonder that Flint pulled sidewise in his chair as if to avoid a stab. "Did you think I was to go into that huddle of a town, with its wealth in furs and groceries, and fetch out a tressure?"

"What, then?" demanded Flint, moistening his lips.

My uncle leaned forward across the table, lips drawn tight over his teeth. His eyes shot sparks.

"Knowledge, fool! Intelligence! That which wise men labor a lifetime to secure and the ignorant pass by in the gutter."

Murray rose from the table and commenced to stroll the length of the cabin, hands clasped under the skirts of his coat. And as he strolled he talked. Flint followed his every move uneasily, with occasional drafts of rum. Peter and I watched the two of them, fascinated by this conflict of wills, which was to exert a vital influence upon our lives—yes, and upon those of hundreds of others.

"I must speak in simple terms, I perceive, Flint," began my great-uncle.

The passion was out of his voice, and the sentence trickled from his lips slowly, with an air of detachment.

Flint nodded sullenly, seeing that an answer was required.

"We have frequently discussed the possibility of taking one of the Spanish tressure ships," continued Murray. "But we have never attempted the project because we could not discover the date of sailing or the port wherein the treasure was embarked. It hath been the custom of the Spaniards in recent years—in fact, since the depredations of Morgan and his brethern to shift arbitrarily the port of embarkation from year to year, as likewise to change the date of sailing. One year the port would be Cartagena, power which stirred my unwilling admiration.

"To whom do you owe your present position?" he asked coldly.

C. H. S. BASKETBALL CLASS TOURNAMENT

Class Plays Every Evening of This Week at Gym.

For the benefit of those who were unable to see the recent basketbull tournament at Petoskey, the local class teams are putting on a class tournament this week in the gynasium ut Hooker's garage, under auspices of the high school faculty.

Four games have been played so fnr, which hnve attracted many basketball fans. In Monday night's games, the Freshmen girls defeated the County Normal girls 25 to 15 in a snappy gnme.

The second game between the Freshmen and Sophomore boys resulted in a 20 to 8 victory for the Freshmen. Good team work was shown and the Freshmen are looked upon as the highest contenders for the chumpionship. The high scorers on the Freshmen teams were Valerin Ripley nnd Dick Marshnll.

Tuesduy night, two games between Seventh and Eighth grade girls and boys were fast and exciting, the girls winning 16 to 15 in n close fust game. In the boys' game the Seventh Graders were victorious, the final score being 24 to 9.

The finals will be played off Thursday night at 7:30. These last games will be the best and a large crowd is expected. The winning team will be presented with the class cup.

Friday night Bellaire High will play the local Senior team in the last game of the season.

Thank-you Polly "Under the Laurels."—Adv. 12t1.

SURPRISE BANQUET FOR MRS. J. J. HOWE

Honor Guest at Birthday Party at Home of Her Daughter

Mrs. J. J. Howe of Cozy Nook Farm, Route 4, now visiting in Chicago, was pleasantly surprised Thursday with a "Sea Food" dinner, given in her honor at the home of her daughter, Mrs. E. E. Smith of that city, the occasion being her 76th birthday.

Besides being the recipient of congratuations, well wishes and gifts, she was hnppily surrounded by her other three daughters, Mrs. R. Molet of Charlevoix, Mrs. J. F. Reiss and Mrs. Wm. Roberts of Chicago. Her grand daughter, Mrs. A. R. Hall of Charlevoix, ncted as toastmaster for the occasion, and her great grand daughter, Miss Fern Aleen Hall, also of Charlevoix, contributed to the program. Her sons, C. R. Kendnll of Massachusetts, and A. R. Kendull of Nebraska, while unable to attend in person, made their presence felt by having caused the table and room to be decornted profusely with sweet pens, making a very beautiful setting.

A good time, well and long to be remembered, was had by all, and the parting wish of the children was "mother, may all the future milestones in your life be passed as happily as the one Thursday, March 11, 1926."—Contributed.

AT THE MOVIES

Barbara LaMarr in "Heart of a Siren"

Phil Rosen, who has just completed the direction of Sawyer-Lubin's "The Henrt of a Siren," is especially enthusiastic over the results achieved by Barbara La Marr, Conway Tearle and the supporting cast in this production, which was adapted from Florence Reed's stage play, "Hail and Farewell."

Rosen, since his direction of Abraham Lincoln," one of the big specials relensed by First National Pictures, was engaged by Arthur H. Sawyer to mnke this picture in an effort to secure the finest directorinl talent available for Miss LnMarr.

The picture will be First National's offering at the Palace Theatre next Saturday and Sunday 27-28.

"The Best People" Next Wednesday

"The Best People" a Sidney Olcott-Paramount production, a screen version of David Grey and Avery Hopwood's Broadway stage hit comes to the Palace Theatre on Wednesday next. Warner Baxter, Esther Ralston, Kathlyn Williams are featured in the leading roles of the cast.

The story takes you into the fashionable Lenox home. The Lenoxes, wenlthy, well bred, rated as among "the best people" of New York, lenrn, to their dismay, that their son is madly in love with n chorus girl. Coincidentally, their daughter hns developed a deep affection for the family chauffeur. Her ideu of a real good time is to have him take her to a movie.

ALL WORN OUT?

So Was Mrs. Taylor Who Tells Her Experience

Are you tired all the time; worn-out night and day? Does your back ache as if it would break? Do you suffer dizziness, headaches, rheumntic twinges or distressing urinary disorders? You hnve good cause, then, to be alarmed nbout your kidneys. Do as mnny of your townfolk recommend. Use Donn's Pills—a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys. This Chnrlevoix case is convincing:

Mrs. Thos. Taylor, 101 Wood St., says: "I suffered with a dull, nagging nche through the small of my back, which hurt me so I could hardly stoop or strnighten. I begnn to feel nervous and had a worn out feeling. I had headaches and dizzy spells and my kidneys acted too often. After using Donn's Pills, from Fessenden's Drug Store, I was rid of the trouble."

BOYS WANDER, AND ALMOST PERISH

Two Children Lost and Found in Snow With Feet Frozen

Glenn Hopkins, 7, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hopkins, and Clinton Charles Shearer, 5, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Shearer both of Kegomic, were taken to the Petoskey hospital last Wednesday morning in a serious condition, their feet severely frost bitten as the result of exposure throughout the night, Tuesday.

The unfortunate youngsters, who had been missing from their homes since Tuesday afternoon, were found by the caretaker of the Romona Park resort at about seven o'clock last Wednesdny morning, lying exhausted and asleep nbout six rods or so from the riding stables. A collie dog which had accompanied them lay ncross their bodies nnd it is to the warmth of their pet's body that snving of their lives mny be ascribed.

The boys had been sighted at about three o'clock in the nfternoon over near the fox furm, hnving previously announced their intention to some of their small friends of "hiking" to Harbor Springs and coming back ncross the ice. When they did not return at nightfall, men from the tannery colony started out to look for them and were later joined in the search by members of the Petoskey Boy Scouts who were called from their beds at nenr-midnight.

METHODIST CHURCH

Next Sunday—An all day servlee. Hours of worship, 10:30 sermon, "The Crowns of Jesus."

7:00 sermon, "The Sweetest Saint."

From 2:30 until 5:30 p. m., will be the Sacrament period of the day. During this period, people may come by families, by classes or by societies, and be cared for according to their wishes. There will be no preaching, nor singing, nor visiting in the church. None need stay longer than their needs require. The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper and the Sacrament of Baptism will be administered. Parents may bring their children. Church receptions will be eared for at this time. Classes and societies will make appointments for special hours. Ushers will direct the order of procedure and the pastor will be present all the afternoon to serve the public and the church. Any person who desires may participate in the afternoon of worship and thoughtfulness. This is an invitation to come. Come at any hour, during this period.

6:00 p. m. is the Epworth League hour of devotion and study.

The evening service will be of great interest to the public. Special features will be, echo singing (always something different,) vocal solo, "The Palms," Mrs. Ira Adams, a character sermon, "The Sweetest Saint," choral singing and orchestral music.

The aim next Sunday is two hundred fifty in Sunday school. We were close to that mark lnst Sunday. Just a little thoughfulness will reach it next Sunday. Think—

Junior church comes at 10:30 each Sundny. After the sermon to the Juniors next Sundny, they will go for the story hour to the Junior room.

BAPTIST CHURCH

While we are compelled tn vneate our auditorium for repairs we will worship in the basement parlors. Two good sized audiences met there last Sunday and many said they enjoyed the congested fentures because it promised the better conditions when we do return to the usual conditions.

Last week there were fifty-one ladies attended the Aid Society meeting at the Richmond home on Antrim St., and today they are meeting nt the Usher home on Clinton St. The bad condition of the walks will doubtless cut down the attendance somewhat but the snme spirit of enthusiasm will be there.

Our young people are all busy preparing for a proper observance of Enster. Who can more properly enjoy the Resurrection, than those who have been buried with Christ in bnptism? It is n beautiful symbol—why substitute something else? Read Romans sixth.

The pnstor will preach Sunday morning and evening and welcome in his congregation nll who care to study with him some timely themes. If the reader does not worship with us we hope you will "go to church" somewhere. It is a good thing to do for yourself and it is a good example for others.

FEATURE EVENINGS OF GREAT INTEREST

Features of Worth and Interest to be Rendered

Each evening, except Monday and Saturday, there will be feature servicea in the Methodist Episcopal church, during Holy week, including both Palm Sunday and Easter. The pastor, assisted by the church and congregation, will have entire charge of the services. Next Sunday evening, Palm Sunday, various features of worth and interest will be rendered. The sermon subject will be "The Sweetest Saint," Mrs. Ira Adams will sing "The Palms."

Tuesday night will be Sunday school night. Classes will "pull" certain "stunts" of a "dignified" kind, at the opening of the happy hour. There will be special music and n twenty minute talk by the pastor. His subject will be "The Christian."

Wednesday night is music night. In addition to the musical program, the pastor will deliver his popular church lecture "The City Foursquare." This is free. No collection will be asked. A great evening is planned and the public is invited.

Thursday night is fellowship night. Among the speeial features will be the Easter message from slides, and a sermon fitting to the hour whose subject will be, "It is Finished." Always special music of quality.

Friday night is Good Friday night. The features of the service will be, choral singing, the hymns nf the cross, special and appropriate music, a sermon from "Pictures That Preach." These are not sildes, but actual pictures. Each person that attends church will be given one of these beautiful reproductions of Hoffman's "Christ in Gethsemane." The sermon will have for its subject the one word, "Farther/" and will be built around the message the picture tells.

The Enster program will he announced later. But the public will find these pre-Easter services a good preparation for the one great day triumphant of the church. No one will be confused or embarassed at any of these services. They are calculated to be helpful and happy occasions. Come and hear the rich message of the church and enjoy its welcome fellowship. Bring your friends.

Ford

When You Trade Your Car—

Ford owners are continually being approached by automobile salesmen who wish to "accept" Fords as part payment on more expensive cars.

It is logical that automobile dealers should be eager to trade with Ford owners. No other used car is so easy to sell as a used Ford because everyone has confidence in Ford quality. And it is not expensive to recondition, since Ford replacement parts are lowest in price.

Most automobiles carry greater discounts to dealers than the Ford—another reason why other dealers may offer the Ford owner a larger trade-in allowance.

But, bear these facts in mind:

The amount of the trade-in allowance you can get is not the most important thing for you to consider. The big thing is the difference you have to pay. And remember, that the higher priced car will not be so easy to dispose of when you come to trade it in.

If you wish to trade your Ford for a new automobile, stick to the car that you know to be dependable, economical, efficient. Go to your Ford dealer.

He will give you a fair and liberal allowance for your present Ford and will gladly arrange payment of the balance to suit your convenience.

Order for Publication

State of Michigan, The Probate Court for the County of Charlevoix.

At a session of said Court, held at the Probate office in the City of Charlevoix, in said County, on the 3rd day of March, A. D. 1926.

Present: Servetus A. Correll, Probate Judge.

In the Matter of the Estate of Albert Brown, Deceased.

The above estate having been admitted to probate and Charles H. Emrey appointed administrator thereof.

It is Ordered that four months from this date be allowed for creditors to present their claims against said estate, and that such claims will be heard by said court on Wednesday the 7th day of July, A. D. 1926, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, at the Probate office in the city of Charlevoix.

It is Further Ordered, That public notice thereof be given by publication of this order for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing, in the Charlevoix Courier a newspaper printed and circulated in this county.

Servetus A. Correll,
10t3 Judge of Probate.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed by Fred Skelton and Eltie Skelton, of the Township of Chandler, Charlevoix County, Michigan, unto the Union Trust & Savings Bank of Flint, Michigan, a Michigan bunking corporation, dated the 23rd day of October, 1911, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Charlevoix County, Michigan, on the 24th day of October, A. D. 1911, in Liber 47 of Mortgages on page 389, on which mortgage there is now claimed to be due the sum of two hundred ninety-one and fifty-seven one-hundredths dollars, (291.57), including interest computed to the date thereof, and also an attorney fee of fifteen ($15.00) dollars provided by statute, and no suit or proceeding at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, notice is hereby given that on Friday, the 4th day of June, A. D. 1926, at one o'clock in the afternoon (Eastern Standard Time), we shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Charlevoix, Michigan, that being the place where the Circuit Court for Charlevoix County is held, the premises described in said mortgage or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage with seven per cent interest and all legal costs, together with an attorney fee of fifteen ($15.00) dollars provided by statute, the premises described in said mortgage as the following described premises, situated in the Township of Chandler, County of Charlevoix and State of Michigan, viz: The northeast quarter (¼) of the southwest quarter (¼) of section thirty-four (34), township thirty-three (33) north, range four (4) west.

rlar service — and includes sisal, sugar, cotton, lumber and bauxite ore.

ON THE OTHER SIDE—

The Lakes-to-Gulf waterway has been hitched up to the diversion of Lake Michigan water by the Chicago Sanitary district with the object of pulling through congress authorization for perpetual diversion of 10,000 cubic feet per second.

"Practical politics" are being played in an effort to force through congress the 10,000 c. f. s. diversion "for the purpose of navigation" in the waterway.

Diversion of 10,000 c. f. s. is not needed for navigation. An ample volume for an eight-foot waterway would be supplied by diversion now permitted for sanitary purposes and which must be permitted for some years to come—possibly indefinitely.

Sanitary District Active

Direct interests behind the fight for immediate congressional authorization of 10,000 c. f. s. diversion are the Chicago Sanitary district and the Illinois State waterway, both of which will profit financially from every added foot of diversion through its use in generating waterpower—the sanitary district profiting a million dollars a year now from Lake Michigan water, and the state expecting to profit at least $1,500,000 a year from waterway power developments. They have as an ally the Mississippi Valley association.

Diversion at Chicago has lowered the levels of lakes Michigan and Huron around six inches.

Right now these lakes are the lowest in history and lake interests have suffered great damage. While the greater part of the lowering is due to climatic conditions, precipitation in the northern regions having been abnormally short for seven years, the six inches charged against the Chicago diversion has been particularly costly.

Engineers say lake levels can be restored and regulated under normal climatic conditions by compensating works governing the flow at the outlets. This matter of governing the flow requires international adjustment and co-operation.

The subject is thus far bigger than the matter of fixing the size of the flow at Chicago and action by

HERE ARE CONCLUSIONS.

Looking at the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway strictly on its merits as an inland transportation project, there appears to be scarcely any worthy reason why the upper lake states should be against it. On the other hand, there are various reasons why these states should be for it.

But looking at the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway was a funnel through which to rob the lakes of their natural waters to the serious detriment of lake state interests, then the lake states have very serious reasons for being against it.

Let the Chicago Sanitary district and the state of Illinois restore lake levels in so much as it is humanly possible to restore them, and they will doubtless find the lake states wide open to conversion as to the desirability and even necessity of the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway.

Politicians Muddle Issue

But while the issue is as simple in theory as it appears in the last three paragraphs, it is not so simple in actual fact. That is because the politicians are muddling matters. They have dragged the waterway into a game of secret, blufting, hidden cards of ter-ible politics. The states that might be the hardest hit, decidedly favorably by the waterway considering its merits are disgusted into turning their back upon it either in indifference or in active opposition.

Log-rolling methods have been used to fixing up the Mississippi Valley behind the fight in congress for the designated 10,000 c. f. s. diversion, and the old pork barrel swindle has been resorted to in an effort to push through a $250,000,000 appropriation for the completion of all waterway projects "within the next five years." 70 per cent of these projects lying in the Mississippi valley, but a lot of others being included to gain votes.

An illustration of the workings of this influence operating against the acceptance of the Lakes-to-Gulf waterway project on its merits is offered by the following extract from the annual report of president James E. Smith of the Mississippi Valley association at the St. Louis convention in November:

President Smith's View

"The Valley association has supported with all its influence the diversion from Lake Michigan of the 10,000 cubic feet of water per second, so much needed for navigation and sanitation purposes in the Lakes-to-the-Gulf waterway. The campaign now being conducted against the city of Chicago by fish interests which seek to secure this water for private exploitation and gain must be exposed and its real authors dragged into the pitiless light of full publicity. When this has been done we predict that the lake states and cities which have favored this campaign will reverse their position. The Mississippi Valley association will continue to give its powerful assistance in full measure until the light is won in congress and the last obstacle is overcome."

President Smith, sincere as he may be, can scarcely expect to win over lake states support with such an attitude, which is right in line with the time-confusing tactics of the Chicago and Illinois politicians. The lake states have one big interest—the protection of their lake levels. When these levels have been restored they may be willing to listen to talk about the need of 10,000 c. f. s. diversion, a need not now existing.

That there are members in the Mississippi Valley association not agreeing with the extreme attitude of president Smith on the 10,000 c. f. s. need is shown by the resolutions adopted by the association. These resolutions say:

"Resolved, That this association advocates and urges the passage of legislation by congress that will legalize the right to divert sufficient water from Lake Michigan for navigation purposes in the Illinois and Mississippi rivers."

There is a whole lot of difference between "sufficient diversion" for navigation and a fixed 10,000 c. f. s. for navigation.

Sliding Diversion Possible

In the final solution of the outflow problem of the great lakes the United States and Canada may adopt some plan whereby there will be no fixed, all-year-round diversions or flows. In years when there is plenty of water an international commission may allow liberal use for power and navigation. Where there is a scarcity of inflow as has existed for seven years past—such a commission may limit the outflow in such a way as to best guard the interests of all concerned.

Here are words of wisdom from the Chicago Sanitary district's own engineering board of review—words found in the second paragraph of part II of its report on the lake lowering controversy:

Engineer See Whole Problem.

"The determination of the quantity of water that shall be permitted to pass from Lake Michigan into the drainage canal is merely a detail in this greater problem of deciding how the great lakes can be best utilized for the benefit of the United States and the Dominion of Canada. It is a key detail, however, and if it be insisted that the diversion of water through the canal must now be fixed irrevocably then the great lakes and the Lakes-to-Gulf water problems must be settled at the same time. Otherwise the decision is likely to prove inequitable and be followed by prolonged controversy and hardship to many persons and interests."

There is common sense and justice. Too bad the Sanitary district politicians could not take the same view as the engineers. But common sense and justice are not the basis on which the Sanitary district politicians have motivated in this whole controversy. They have preferred to play "practical politics" to attain local ends at national expense and that is what they are playing now. The lake states are not willing to play with them.

Best Utilization of Lakes

The lake states want the controversy settled in the broad way suggested by the engineers—a way that will determine how the great lakes can best be utilized for the benefit of the two great nations bordering them. That use may include a large waterway to the gulf of Mexico as well as a ship canal down the St. Lawrence to the sea, but foremost of all stands navigation within the lakes themselves and the preservation of the shores as pleasant dwelling places.

These latter can only be secured by a restoration of our lake levels. That end congress should see attained before it even considers further spoilation of the water of the lakes.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS

By B. C. Mellencamp

Co-operative Extension Work

Dear Farmer: Spring will soon be here, therefore it is the proper time to get your program outlined for your farm needs. Having sent out no circulars thus far, the following will contain many subjects and announcements that will be of interest to you and please spare the time to read carefully and keep for reference.

Dairy

Figures from 18,014 cows, who have completed yearly records, give us the surprising information that cows producing only 150 lbs. of butterfat a year cost $40.55 for feed and leaves an income over cost of feed $27.90; cows of 200 lbs. fat—cost of feed $47.27 and $42.45 net profit; 250 lbs. fat—cost feed $53.78 and $57.82 net profit; 300 lbs. fat—cost of feed $59.28 and net profit of $73.34; 400 lbs. fat—cost of feed $69.35 and $105.07 net profit over cost of feed. Based on 44c cream for entire year.

This table proves that the more production from the cow the greater the net profit, and hence feeding and culling are important factors. As a farmer, you can be more efficient in both—feed a balanced ration. It pays better. It increases production and production means more money—sell the poor cows. They never will make money. They take profits from good cows. Lastly breeding increases ability of cow for added production, so why not use a good purebred sire and sell the scrub where he belongs. If you want to buy better cows to improve your herd, or are interested in buying a better sire, alone or co-operating with your neighbors, drop a line to county agent Mellencamp at Boyne City and he will gladly lend his assistance. An effort will be made this spring to line up the men interested in the various breeds for trips to buy desirable stock, male or female. Also if wishing to get a correct record of your cows, join the Charlevoix Cow-Testing Association, costs little, means money for you. Are you interested?

Calf Club

Is your boy or girl interested in your farm and farm home? What wouldn't you take to interest him or her? Why don't you let him join the Calf club? Let him feel the pride of ownership, let him have a calf of his own to feed and care for. Your boy or girl is eager to gain knowledge and help themselves. They want to learn about live stock and are anxious to train themselves to be efficient. This spring plans are laid to organize clubs throughout the county, so let the county agent know you are interested. Last year three boys were given a free trip to the State fair in recognition of their Calf Club work.

Clothing Project

Last year 295 families availed themselves of the opportunity of learning many helpful and timely suggestions in sewing. Due to the splendid results, an advanced course in clothing will be given this year, starting about the middle of April and carried on in the same way as formerly, which was to select a leader from each locality, who received the instruction from the specialist, then gave the lesson to the local group as their representative. Glad to state new groups can be organized to take advanced work, whether they received last year's project or not, so now is your opportunity to get this excellent course free of charge. Be sure your community is represented this year, either by you or another lady, as your representative and the safest way is to drop a card to the county agent. Sixteen ladies are the maximum to be taught, in each of the two groups and that is not many. Remember this is for everyone, city or rural, so decide now.

Lime

Did you ever test your soil for acidity? Do you realize that lime is your best fertilizer, if soil is sour and can be purchased from Petoskey at $1.00 per ton in bulk, 40 tons minimum? Also your agent can sell you a Soiltex outfit for only 25c, one you can use yourself any day of the week but Sunday and will last for two years. Limestone applied at the rate of from 1-2 ton per acre, will increase your yields and give you alfalfa and sweet clover, the two best friends you have on this earth. Get your neighbors interested with you and get orders for a carload. If interested see your agent or Co-op. manager about this new gold mine.

Just received word from Otsego county, stating they plan on sending for another carload of Pyrotol, the government explosive, for April or May delivery. Less than 10c a pound and with every 200 lbs. you get 100 caps. Get those pesky stumps and stones out of your way. Get your orders in at once or you will be too late.

Hang me up for future use, but before that test your seed corn. It tests low. A stitch in time saves nine.

MISS CORA DRIGGETT AWARDED SCHOLARSHIP

Charlevoix High School Honored By Her Fine Record

Charlevoix High School has been highly honored by the excellent record of one of her students, Miss Cora Driggett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. T. Driggett of this city.

Miss Driggett is a gradoate of C. H. S. class of 1914, Charlevoix County Normal, class of 1915, and Ypsilanti State Normal, class of 1917. She then taught school for six years, resuming her studies at Albion College, and will be among the graduates of this college in June of of this year.

As a reward for high standings and student ability, she will be one of two girls from Albion to be awarded scholarships by the Blakesley Training School of New Haven, Conn.

The award includes free board, tuition and room for two years, at the end of which she will receive the degree of master of arts from Yale and a diploma for Christian work from Blakesley.

RUSHED FROM TRAIN TO LOCAL HOSPITAL

Harold Meggison Operated on For Removal of Appendix

After spending a winter of hard study at Ferris Institute, Big Rapids, going from there to Grand Rapids to take the final examinations that will make him a full, flegged registered pharamacist, Harold Meggison was stricken on Friday last with a sudden attack of appendicitis while on his way home to Charlevoix.

He arrived in Traverse City at the home of his parents Friday afternoon, and then learning that Dr. R. B. Armstrong was on his way home Monday, took the same train with the doctor for Charlevoix. The operation took place Monday evening at the Charlevoix hospital, and from all reports he is doing as well as could be expected.

Just another incident of how little one knows what will happen as the days roll by. Harold will resume his work at the Fessenden Drug Store when able to be up and around.

MAKE MUSICIANS OF SCHOOL BOYS

MANY UPPER MICHIGAN CITIES ADOPT THIS PLAN

Results in New Center of Interest and Appeals to Heart of Every Boy and Girl

The Courier has been requested to publisb the following article captioned "Bands in High School," the idea being to stimulate local interest, if possible along this line. We are complying with this request with the understanding that no reflection or criticism is being made nor is intended towards the well organized city band we now have.

The object in bringing this matter up is to build up a band from younger material. Not that they cnn produce better music nor will work harder, but to relieve those who are now taking an active part in the local organization whom we know, in many instances, cnnnot spare the necessary time from their business duties.

We gather from the article that the high school band in Iron River has proved a great success. East Jordan has a high school band. Numerous other northern Michigan towns have excellent high school bands. Charlevoix has as gopd material in the school for a band as nny other place. It might work out fine. The nrticle follows:

"No extra-curricula activity undertaken by the Iron River board of education has met with such universal commendation than the institution of instrumental music classes in the grndes and high school. This appreciation was expressed at a recent meeting of the Lions club, which subsequently adopted a resolution expressing its utmost support of the band and glee club organizations and all activities allied with the best interests of the pupils' broad education.

"The organization of band and glee club classes has had a visible saiutary effect upon Iron River's youthful life, although the band is less than two yenrs old.

"A noticeable effect was pointed out by Dr. E. C. Tyler in his commendation before the Lions of the work the music classes are doing. Aside from developing a high appreciation of music and song, he said, the classes are getting the engrossed nttention of pupils, thus converting irrepressible energy into constructive channels.

"For many years Iron River has faced the need of utilizing the restlessness of youth instead of permitting it to take destructive turns. This very need created much sentiment for a school gymnasium where children could spend their time in supervised play amid pleasant and wholesome environment. The plan, when placed to a popular vote, was rejected, and Iron River boys and girls were gain turned out to the streets for their fun.

"Now comes, however, a new center of interest and it appeals to the heart of every boy and girl. It is the opportunity to become a member of a band, to be an integral part of a proud school organization. Or it is the privilege of being a member of the girls glee club in which the building happiness of tender years can express itself in song.

"Each has its value to the student in after years in his or her march to personal triumph. It may be this early musical training will bring out latent talent in many pupils, influencing their life'a coursa; it is certain each will live a fuller life because of his ability to participate in or enjoy good music.

"There is no uncertainty about the future of music in the schools. In less than two years it has established itself as a firm necessity. Any talk of eliminating this deparment would meet with solid opposition."

"The above editorial from the Iron River Reporter strengthens our belief and contention that the only practical and possible way to build up a band for our city is through the schools. Iron River is just one of the many small cities and villages af the state that boast af such splendid musical organizations, fostered and supported through the school systems. Cheboygan has its share of latent musical talent that can never hope to be developed or brougbt to the surface except in this way. We could nsme a dozen towns and cities that have enjoyed the same experience Iron River boasts of. A musical director capable of organizing the young people into such musical organizations, teaching them as a whole during school hours and individuslly on his own time would very soon bring about a marked change in our midst. We cannot hope to build a band out of the older timber of the community. That is out of the question. The public wants a band, but we can't afford to hire a leader whose only duty it shall be to come here and orgsnize a band and direct it. The cost of such a man alone would be prohibitive and that cost would be but the initial step. A municipal band would have to be uniformed, music purchased and other salaries paid. It is not possible. There is but one way and that is as other places are doing—through the schools. Information about such a project can easily be obtained. It is no new or untried thing. It is a success and properly conducted does all it seems to be doing for our neighbors up in Iron River."

RENDER CANTATA "THE LIVING CHRIST"

Congregatiooal Choir Largely Increased by Musicians of Note From East Jordan

The climax of the Easter celebration at the Congregational church next Sunday will will be the vesper musical service at 4:30 at which will be rendered the cantata, "The Living Christ," a composition by Henry Wiidermere. Tho church choir has been largely incrensed by the addition of other singers from Charlevoix and East Jordan and will be supported by the organ, the piano and an orchestra of instrumentalists from Charlevoix and East Jordan, the presentation being directed by Mrs. A. J. Stelter. The following order of the numbers will indicate the development of the noble theme:

1. "The Night of Sorrow"—Prelude and chorus.
2. "Let Thy Will Be Done"—Contralto solo.
3. "Christ Has Risen"—Soprano solo and chorus.
4. "The World Is Not Thy Goal"—Chorus.
5. "Thou Who Knowest Sorrow"—Soprano and contralto duet.
6. "He Knows His Own"—Chorus for women's voices.
7. "Love Is The Createst of All"—Contralto and tenor duet, chorus and tenor solo.
8. "Lo, I Am With You Aiways"—tenor solo.
9. "The Living Christ"—Quartet of solo voices.
10. "We Come To Thee"—Soprano and bass duet; soprano, tenor and bass trio.
11. "We Shali Behold Him"—Baritone solo.
12. "Hear Us, Father"—Soprano, alto and tenor trio; chorus. —finale.

A repetition of the above program will be given in East Jordan at the First Presbyterian church the following Sunday evening, April 11, by the same chorus and orchestra. These interchanges of church courtesies and expressions of fellowship are a most appropriate observance of the joy of the Easter time and will be appreciated by the large congregations which will enjoy these presentations of the Easter message in sacred music.

FORMER CHARLEVOIXIAN DIES AT MENDON

M. W. LaPeer Succumbs to Short Illness Mareh 19th

M. W. LaPeer, for many years a resident of Charlevoix and Northern Michigan, passed nway at his home in Mendon, Michigan, Friday, March 19, after a short illness.

Deceased was born on Mackinac Island, April 28, 1840. He was a Civil war veteran. Those loft to mourn their loss are his wife, two sons, Cleo H. of East Jordan and Clarence J. Mendon; two daughters, Mrs. Bert Adrain of Mendon, and Miss Kathryn of Battle Creek, besides numerous friends both at Mendon and Charlevoix.

Mr. LaPeer and family were residents of Charlevoix for 15 years prior to their moving ta the southern part of the state some six or seven years ago.

C. A. C. BANQUET WELL ATTENDED

COVERS LAID FOR OVER HUNDRED PEOPLE

Excellent Program of Local Talent Followed by Inspiring Talk by Lee H. Bierce

An enthusiastic crowd attended an informal banquet held by the Charlevoix Association of Commerce at the Masonic temple last Thursday evening, covers being laid for over a hundred people.

President Fred E. Cartier presided over the meeting and promptly at 6:45 all were seated in the dining room and were served a sumptuous supper by the ladies of the Eastern Star.

The evening's program opened with an entertaining and well executed piano solo hy Mrs. A. J. Stelter. Following this number, Mrs. Archie Livingston, accompanied by Mrs. Robert Bridge at the piano and Robert Bridge with violin, sang two beautiful solos. Both numbers were heartily encored by the listeners.

Robert Bridge, secretary and treasurer of the association, briefly outlined tbe program of work laid out for the season of 1926. Mayor Arthur Bergeon then delivered a short talk on pending improvements and their financinl aspect.

Dr. R. B. Armstrong then gave a lengthy account of his recent trip to Florida and Cuba. He related instances and made comparisons of the difference in the manner of conducting business, and quoted many amusing incidents which occurred on his travels through the south.

Mrs. A. L. Fitch delivered an address on civic pride and the duty of all citizens as boosters. Her remarks were quite pointed in many instances and received hearty applause from the audience.

Lee H. Bierce, secretary of the Grand Rapids Chamber of Commerce, was the principal speaker of the evening. Mr. Bierce covered the subject of selling your region to yourself before attempting to resell to outsiders. He urged his listeners to tell the world of the good things and attractions of our community; not to guard them as a secret. "Northern Michigan has possibilities of being the greatest summer playground of the world," said Mr. Bierce. "Publicity will bring it about. Tell the world what you hnve, whether it be resort features, high grade commercinl products, or products of the soil."

His remarks were interesting and held the close attention af his audience. Due to the lateness he was called upon, he simply covered the bigh spots of his topic.

Visitors were present from Boyne City and Petoskey.

TRUCK OWNERS MUST REDUCE THEIR LOADS

Highway Departments Issue Orders To This Effect

Orders have heen issued hy the State Highway Department and County Road Commission to truck owners and drivers to lighten their loads during the spring bresk up and soft condition of dirt roads.

The order will become effective at once. It is issued in an effort to preserve the roads ns much as possible during the spring break. Truck owners too often pay little or no heed to road conditions. They load their trucks to the limit and then some. The consequence is that roads, especislly dirt roads or those with a few inch covering of gravel, break through and the rond, in mnny instances miles of it, is ruined.

This uncalled for waste of the tax payer's money will be stopped this spring. Penalties prescribed hy law are severe and we hope the highway officials will strictly enforce the ruling.

SEND REQUEST FOR MAIL PLANE

ROUTE TO BEAVER ISLAND IMPASSIBLE NOW

With Cable Broke, Islanders Would Be Cut Off From Outside For Month

An effort is being made by Postmaster George Weaver to have the government send an aeroplane to Charlevoix as soon as possible to carry the mail to St. James, Beaver Isinnd. Requests to that end were sent to the Fourth Assistant Postmaster Cenerai at Washington, D .C., Tuesday, and it will probably be known by the end of the week whether the request will be grunted.

Under the present weather conditions, there is no way of getting to St. James, either by boat or water route, and it will be at least four weeks before the boat service can possibly start on account of the ice conditions. The United States cable between Chnrlevoix and St. James has been out of commission now for several weeks, cutting off all communication between the islnnders and the outside world.

Charlevoix has an excellent landing field for neroplanes and every possible assistnnce will be rendered by local officials if it is possible to get a plane here. It will be at least four weeks before boats will be able to run between here and the island and unless Mr. Weaver is successful in his efforts, all means of communication with St. James will be cut off until the ice goes out.

Trips from Cross Village to St. James have been extremely hazarduos this winter on nccount of the condition of the ice floes. At no time were the carriers certain of having good going from one day to the next, and just recently ten days were necessary to make the round trip.

MARCH HAS BEEN LONG WAY FROM LAMB-LIKE

March 31st Witnesses Worst Blow of the Season

Charlevoix and northern Michigan in general, is experiencing one of the most severe storms of the winter as we go to press.

The storm started at about mid night Tuesday evening and has shown no signs of letting up as yet. Considerable local damage has been caused by the high wind, windows being blown out in the Odd Fellow hall, S. M. See & Son's furniture store and the building formerly occupied by Fessenden's drug store.

Rural mail carries were unable to travel their routes Wednesday morning and all turned back after going a few miles out. Fowler's bus to Petoskey went north as far as the Burns hill and returned to town. Reports from Petoskey state that the G. R. & I. trains are running several hours behind schedule as will also probably be true with the P. M.

Grund Rapida received a six inch fall of snow Tuesday, accompanied by high winds, and reports from Chicago, Des Moines, Ia., St. Louis, Mo., and other nouthern points; indicate tbat the storm is general. Wa are commencing ta believe the guy who said "there would be na aammer in the years 1926 and 1927."

RENDER AID TO CRIPPLES

SERVICE INTENDED FOR PHYSICALLY HANDICAPPED

"Rehabilitation Division" Has Made a Fine Record During Past Four Years

Unfortunate persons who are the victims of public or industrisl accident, disease, or congenital conditions, and thus left in a disabled state, used to be considered public or family charges unable to eare for themselves. Michigan, through its public educational system, is now rehabilitating many of those people, and by proper training making them useful and self-supporting.

In the office of the State Superintendent of Public Instruction there is a "Rehabilitation Division" which directs this work. It was established something more than four yenrs ago, and has been directed nnd developed through Percy Angove, state supervisor.

The purpose of this service is to render physically handicapped persons fit to engage in profitable employment, providing training when necessary, and when training is not feasible, by finding suitable employment for the individual. The training is carried on in the schools over the state, in institutions, industrial plants, shops, offices, or anywhere the disahled person may be trained most advsntageously in the shortest time.

Tbis work has developed so that it has been necessary to establish district offices out in the state, working under the direction of the Lansing office. Applications may be made to the Lansing office for registration of any disabled person who is capable of responding to rehablitation wor. However, the legislative act authorizing this service does not include aged and infirm persons, epileptics, or others who must of necessity be constnnt charges. Persons capable of taking the work or being placed in employment may be provided artificial appliances, such as legs, arms or braces, through state funds so provided.

At the close of four years of this branch of public educational service the rehabilitation division had actunlly put bnck into profitnble employment 1,005 disabled and handicapped persons. The first year's salaries of these persons showed a return of 1,136 per cent actual earning power, representing more than 11 times the nmount of money spent in their rehabilitation. This does not take into account the human factor, making over again into life a self-respecting, independent citizen.

A young Polish boy had both hands cut off in a Detroit factory. Through the state division he obtained training in a dancing act in vaudeville and today receives $75 a week nnd his expenses. An American Express Company agent, having a family, was stricken with paralysis of the limbs over night. Through the state service he is now operating a magazine subscription agency, a notary public business, and is a coal salesman, amply providing for himself and family, although consigned to a wheel chair.

These two random examples show the type of story connected with every one of the 1,005 rehabilitation cases handled ta completion by the stnte division, in cooperation with the schools, business, and industry, during the first four years of that public service.

AT THE MOVIES

"Enticement" Appeal Delights Audience

"Enticement," a First National attraction, opens at the Palace Theatre, Saturday and Sunday, April 3 and 4 for a two nights run, and delighted audiences with its appealing love story and thrilling situations. These two elements have been combined with rare skill by Director George Archinbaud, with the result that "Enticement," in the estimation of the writer, is one of the outstanding pictures of the year.

In producing the photoplay, the Thomas H. Ince Corporation assembled a cast that shines with unusual brilliance in enacting this powerful tale, which is based on the novel by Clive Arden.

"Enticement" is a story full of romance, drama and glorious settings. The characters are American, but the story shifts from a little town in Switzerland to Paris and London, and backgrounds of rare beauty have been achieved by the director.

Heart Throbs and Thrills Feature Cruze Production

A wholesome story of tremendous heart appeal, a cast of popular players, direction that leaves nothing to be desired, drama, mystery and thrills, staged against a background of fascinating New York—you'll find them all in James Cruze's latest Paramount masterpiece, "Manquin," which appears at the Palace Theatre Tuesday and Wednesday, April 6-7.

This is the picture version of Fannie Hurst's $50,000 prize-winning Liberty Magazine tale, and it is the type of homey, human plot that lends itself admirably to visualization on the screen and strikes a sincere, realistic note because it deals with incidents and situations familiar to all.

WHAT MY NEIGHBORS SAYS

Is of Interest to Charlevoix Folks

When one has had the misfortune to suffer from backache, headaches, dizziness, urinary disorders and other kidney ills—and has found relief from all this sickness and suffering, that person's advice is of untold value to friends and neighbors. The following case is only one of many thousands, but it is that of a Charlevoix resident. Who could ask for a better example?

Hubert Ackert, mason, 107 W. Garfield Ave., says: "I had a constant ache in the small of my back. I was nervous and often dizzy spells came over me. My kidneys were sluggish and the secretions were scanty. After using a few boxes of Donn's Pills, from Fessenden's Drug Store, I was fixed up in good shape." (Statement given May 4, 1920.)

On October 9, 1924, Mr. Ackert said: "Every time I have had occasion to use Doan's Pills, they always have given the same good results."

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS
By B. C. Mellencamp

Farm Crops Meetings

Plans have been completed to conduct a series of three meetings in the county for assistance to farmers in their problems concerning their choice of crops to raise, the proper kind of crop rotations to use, and the future of the alfalfa and clover seed industry.

Mr. C. E. Skiver, Extension Specialist in farm crops, will be the speaker and is particularly fitted to discuss your crop problems with you.

The first meeting will be held at the Charlevoix Court House on April 5th, at 8:00, in the evening slow time. Second at East Jordan Armory on April 6th, at 9:30 a. m. slow time. Third meeting at Boyne Falls Town Hall on April 6th, at 1:30 p. m. slow time.

Many farmers are making a success with certified alfalfa and sweet clover seed, with seed potatoes, beans and cereals crops; let's hear how they do it and possibly your conditions are such that you can probably do likewise. Many are having difficulty in getting a good stand of alfalfa and clover. Many are in doubt as to what crops are best suited for this county and many other problems.

By all means plan to attend your nearest meeting. It will mean dollars and cents to you. Don't forget the dates and hear Mr. Skiver.

Rex Supernaw—Charlevoix Highly Honored

Charlevoix County is justly proud of the accomplishments of Rex Supernaw, member of the Boys' and Girls' Calf Club of 1925. The splendid work completed by this boy has added to the achievements of this county, as well as Northern Michigan.

For the first time, Club Championships have been awarded to Northern counties, as Antrim has the Potato Club champion, Charlevoix second place in Calf Club work, and Antrim third in Canning Club work and this should be an incentive for an increase in Club work this year.

Rex owns a Jersey calf, won first prize at the County Fair in his breed grand champion over all calves and completed his project, as a result was selected as Charlevoix county champion.

Come on boys, who will win this honor.

A treat is waiting you when you see "Under the Laurels" at the Palace Theatre, April 13th. Don't miss it.—Adv. 13-t1.

CHAPTER IV.—Continued

"My counsel is to bear up for Spyglass island and careen there. Both ships are foul, and 'twill prove an excellent opportunity to make all clean and right."

Flint nodded.

"We shall need our speed against the Spaniard," he commented.

"I shall," returned my great-uncle with some emphasis. "This brings me to my second point. 'Tis advisable that we do not cruise in company for the treasure. I aim to intercept the Santissima Trinidad before she passes from the Caribbean into the Atlantic."

The blue look became intensified in Flint's face.

"You'd leave the Walrus behind?" he demanded.

"I must. Figure it for yourself," argued my relative. "Two tall ships plying the narrow seas, within easy sail of Jamaica and the Havana and Marmico! We should have the frigates after us in no time. My plan is to masquerade as a king's ship, running from any ugly customers who show themselves."

"Aye," said Flint. "And after you'd taken the treasure and stowed it all below hatches what thought would you give to us aboard the Walrus, eh? You'd be up and off, and we might whistle for our share."

"You wrong me, Captain Flint," replied my great-uncle simply.

But Flint gave an ugly laugh. It might be the rum or the stimulus of the debate or a gradual access of self-reliance; but he was no longer to be cowed by moral suasion.

"If I wrong you, Murray, 'twould be the first time without valid cause," he rejoined. "Come, come! You must think of me better than that. It won't wash. What you say sounds well enough. It may be true. But I couldn't go back and report it to a fo'csle counsel on the Walrus and expect to have it believed. I have to blink myself when I think of it. ——!" He grinned evilly. "I know what I'd do in your shoes."

My great-uncle regarded him speculatively.

"What, then, is your answer?" Murray inquired.

"I don't play on those terms," returned Flint with decision. "Let me cruise with you, have a share in taking the prize, and I'll talk differently."

Murray shook his head.

"'Twould ruin the plan. I know you, Flint. 'Tis not in you to cruise for days and forego fat merchants that cross your bows, ripe to be plucked. No, I can't risk it. Alone, I can contrive not to attract attention. In company, we should stir up a hornet's nest."

"Curse me for a canting magger, then, if I'll trade on it," snarled Flint. "I'll not trust you, Murray, and that's flat."

"Suppose that I gave you a hostage?" suggested my great-uncle tentatively. "One whose life means to me more than my own."

"The man does not live," Flint swore roundly.

"He sits across the table," returned Murray. "My grandnephew and heir. I will go so far as to assert that the only reason I concern myself with this exploit is that I may secure estate and preferment for him."

Flint eyed him shrewdly, looked from him to me and from me to him.

"Your grandnephew, you say? Long John says you're choice o' him. Still— No I like not your terms, Murray. They offer too little."

"They are the best I can offer," answered Murray definitely. "I will add, that there may be no misunderstandings, Flint, that the odd seven hundred thousand pounds goes to promote the interest of a cause, and not to line the pockets of Spanish officials, as you may suspect; and it is highly probable that considerable of my share will follow it. I pay seven hundred thousand pounds, to be divided share and share by the two ships' companies, and your company will incur no risk to win it."

Flint rose and settled his belt.

"I accept, for that I can do no better," he said. "But I must have the hostage." He snapped his finger toward me.

"Come on, my lad. We'll show you the life of real gentlemen adventurers aboard the Walrus."

"I'm no negro man to be bargained over and passed from owner to owner!" I exclaimed hotly. "You can make me go, but I'll not step willingly."

Flint was about to answer with a spurt of oaths when Murray interrupted.

"You anticipate mattern," he rebuked his associate. "There is no occasion for a hostage yet. We shall sail at once for the Rendezvous. It will be weeks, aye, months, before I am in shape to sail west under Hispaniola. Time enough then to talk of delivering your hostage."

For an instant Flint appeared to be about to object to this view, but he evidently decided it was not worth another dispute.

"Let it go" he asseated gruffly. "We'll settle the details at the island. I—n me—" this with a sudden revival of friendliness— "I knew we had not picked up that red-headed lad for nothing! 'Tis a sure sign o' luck."

And he swaggered from the cabin, stamping and banging the door and scattering curses freely as he gained the deck and shouted for his men to row him back to the ships.

CHAPTER VII

A Wicked Old Man's Dream

My great-uncle sank into his chair with a gesture of disgust and poured three fingers of brandy into a wineglass.

"Phaugh!" he exclaimed. "At times I am nauseated by the company perforce I keep."

I laughed, and he put the glass from his lips, peering at me across its rim as if surprised.

"You find occasion for mirth in my remark, Robert?"

"No," I said; "I am only expressing to you my feeling that you have as little claim to possession of a sense of honor as the man who was just here."

Murray's large face, with its powerful, craggy features, glowed with the radiance of an intense personal conviction.

"What is honor? Or dishonor? Certes, here we have a call for close reasoning. No hasty generalities can dismiss so vexed a problem, which hath consumed the attention of gentlemen since gentility's institution. I conceive of honor as the quality of being faithful to oneself, to the ethical standard one has established for this life we pass through so precariously."

"So that if a man practices dishonesty toward all save himself he preserves his honor!" I protested.

"Now do you twist my thoughts," replied my great-uncle. "And in the same breath you raise a complementary question: What is dishonesty—or honesty? As I have told you before, I take from those who have much, those who prey upon others."

"You are clever with words," I sneered; "but I'll not be fooled. What have you to say of your craft in deluding O'Donnell into risking his daughter aboard this treasure ship? Do you call it honorable to persuade a foolish unbalanced fellow to take an innocent young girl out of a convent, carry her half across the world, and then, to cloak a miserable conspiracy, plunge her into the society of such scoundrels as Flint and yourself?"

Instead of losing his temper, as I had expected, my great-uncle stared at me very earnestly throughout this tongue-lashing. A speculative look came into his eyes.

"You have seen this maid, I believe," he said.

"I met her by accident. 'Twas I

"I Met Her by Accident."

saved her from walking into the White's Head after her father."

"You did very well," he approved warmly. "And you spoke to her? Prithee, Robert, what manner of maid is she? A lady?"

"Yes."

"She should be an exquisite chit, Robert. She has good blood in her. Her mother was a younger sister of the duke of Leitrim, and her father's father was a younger son of Lord Donegal. She will be much in the fore when King James returns to Whitehall."

"If he does!" I jeered. "I marvel that you should use so hardly a maid of such birth."

"Hardly? Why do you say that?"

"Oh, an end to your shabby deceits and subterfuge!" I shouted. "I ha' told you already I know she is to be dragged aboard your ship when you take the Santissima Trinidad. I could stomach your treatment of me, Murray. But to expose a slip of a girl, scarce more than a child, to life on this floating hell and the attentions of Flint and his lambs!"

My great-uncle pursed his lips.

"What a vehement youth! As to the maid's inclusion in our scheme, 'twas manifestly of the chiefest importance that Colonel O'Donnell's connection with me be not suspected. And the best way to cloak that was to have his daughter accompany him."

"But why?" I persisted. "Why all this devious deceit? Why mix a young maid in an unsavory intrigue? Why make her father disloyal to his master?"

Murray flushed crimson.

"He is not disloyal to his master," he replied with his first show of anger. "Colonel O'Donnell's master, my master—aye, your master—is King James! What doth O'Donnell care for the paltry Spaniard who sits in the palace at Madrid? What do any of us care for the Spaniards, who have not been men enough to live up to their declarations of support of the Stuarts? Boy, are you a fool?"

There was that about his rage which benumbed my own and awakened again the reluctant admiration which puzzled and embarrassed me. What was it my father had said of him?

"He is sincere in a queer, twisted way."

Past doubt, he was. I sensed a warped nobility of mind which stirred me to sympathy and pity. I felt of a sudden as if our places had been reversed, as if his white hairs were mine, and his my unlined face.

"Perhaps I am a fool," I said. "Yet if I know nothing of your plan and so am inclined to misconstrue it, whose fault is that?"

He dropped knife and fork and fixed me with his eyes, so marvelously alive and bright in their setting of crow's feet and wrinkles, so luminous with youth.

"Those are the first words you have spoken which have had any tinge of kindness to them," he answered. "'Tis my fault you are so far ignorant, Robert, and I will endeavor to repair the error. I did not seek to delude you when I told you I carried you from New York because I needed your assistance, and that is so far true that I admit without hesitation I must have your help before I can achieve aught of my future plans for bettering your station in life. In fine, Robert, I need you at this time being more than you can need me; and your hostageship with Flint is but the least of the services I hope from you."

"That is frank," I replied. "And I will match it. I have told you I'll not help in piracy; nor will I. The taking of this treasure ship is—"

"Bide, bide," he interrupted. "Before you commit yourself further let me tell my story."

He left the table and took from a cupboard in the wall a rolled map which he spread upon the table between us, shoving aside the plates and glasses to make room for it. I saw at a glance 'twas a chart of the Caribbean sea and the Spanish main and the islands which stretched from the top of the Floridas to the Brazils.

"This is for reference," he remarked. "My story begins in Europe, and we require no map for that. Your father, Robert, was a stout Jacobite at your age. He has since changed his convictions; but we'll say nothing on that score. I, on the contrary, was born a Jacobite and am one still, heart and soul. I shall never rest until the Hanoverian usurper has been displaced.

"I was on the other side of Africa when I first had word Prince Charles had raised the White Cockade in Scotland in the '45. I sailed for home, as you have heard, and was many months too late to be of service. But I established touch with friends in France who work for the cause, and so learned that the good work was going merrily on. All that is wanted for another rising is money—gold!"

He paused, and a slow, strange smile shadowed his face and he drew a finger across the map on the table.

"I said I would tell you a story," he went on. "But after all 'tis only a dream—a wicked old man's dream, Robert. 'Tis so you think of me, I know—and your father—and Peter there—and—I wonder what the little maid you spoke with would think! Or the poor, throneless old king who huddles over his brazier for warmth in the dreary palace in Rome that is all he has left of his majesty! Or Prince Charlie, who flits back and forth from France to the Low countries, scheming and plotting and always cursed for lack of—gold!

"Gold! We stumble for lack of it in every enterprise. With sufficient of it you may upset kingdoms, buy pardons, obtain patents and honors and place. 'Tis a definite substance, mark you, hard and shining and heavy in the hand—not much thistle-down as dreams are made of.

"When was the thought born? I cannot say. Flint and I had often sought the yearly treasure ship, but never had sight of her. Then one day the idea came to me to utilize my Jacobite friends in France and Spain. A bribe, which I supplied, procured for O'Donnell, already an officer on the regular establishment of the Spanish forces, appointment as an inspector of fortifications on the ports on the Main.

His forefinger explored the chart before us and came to rest upon a dot on the flank of the narrow neck of land which joins the two American

"There is Porto Bello, which was the port of the old treasure galleons and discarded as such by the Spaniards after Morgan sacked it. But later they restored and strengthened the fortifications, although in the late war our Admiral Vernon carried it by surprise. At that time Cartagena was the treasure center, and when Vernon attempted it he was repulsed with loss. Two years since the council of the Indies decided to resume sailings from Porto Bello, which is the most advantageously situated of all ports on the Main for the collection of the treasure.

"See! 'Tis about midway betwixt Mexico and Peru, and the mines of Veragua are at its back door. The treasures are fetched south from La Vera Cruz by a ship under escort of the Garda Costas and transferred at Porto Bello to the ship for Spain, which puts forth about the beginning or middle of September.

"This is a strong ship and well manned, but the Spaniards have been taught by centuries of experience to accept no risk for her. Her identity is never known in advance, even to her captain. He sails from Cadiz for the Main under sealed orders which he doth not open until mid-Atlantic is passed, and these orders do but carry him to Porto Bello."

"Then how shall you have word of her sailing?" I broke in, swept off my feet by the rush of this amazing narrative.

"That is O'Donnell's task. He will reach Porto Bello during the summer and be so concerned for the state of the fortifications that he'll refuse to leave until he has put them in defensible condition. Whilst he is there he will receive dispatches from Spain summoning him home on urgent affairs. He will elect to embark upon the treasure ship because she is large and commodious and likewise safe. And thanks to his position, he will have accurate knowledge some days in advance of her sailing date. When he has obtained this fact he will convey it secretly to one Diego Salvezan agent I maintain in that port. Diego, by O'Donnell's help, will get out of town and put to sea in a fast sloop he hath in a little river near where was the ancient town of Nombre de Dios, so that we shall have sure tidings of the Santissima Trinidad's coming and be prepared for her."

"But what of her course?" I scrutinized the map. "There are three separate exits from the Caribbean into the Atlantic."

"You have clapped on to the nub of our problem," said Murray. "'Twas the piece of information I was at most pains to obtain. The Santissima Trinidad will head for the Mona passage. I will show you why. The first aim of the Spaniards is to conceal her voyage; she sails a course which keeps her as much as possible in open

Who Pays?

You who believe advertising is too expensive to justify its returns, listen to this:

Twenty-eight years ago the makers of a watch produced a cumbersome but accurate article, priced $1.50. Without advertising, they sold that first year 12,000. The next year, with a little tentative advertising, they sold 87,000. Encouraged, they increased the factory and distribution, reduced the size of the watch, priced it $1.00, made a reasonable advertising appropriation—and sold 485,000.

When the makers of a famous camera began advertising thirty years ago, they made one camera which took a 2 1-2 inch picture, and sold at $25.00. In 1917, that time of the distressing upward trend of prices, these people made a better camera that sold for $10.00.

Who pays for the advertising? Or does the advertising pay for itself?

And what good advertising executed in attractive print did for the watch and the camera, it can do in some measure for your product.

Let us talk with you about the printing of your sales literature.

* CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH *
* Rev. B. G. Mattson, Pastor *

The First Congregational church announces the following of meetings and programs for Holy Week and Easter Sunday:

On Thursday at six p. m. the church families and their friends are asked to assemble promptly for the last of the series of monthly fellowship suppers for the season. The program following the supper will be a pageant presented by the Woman's Missionary Society, entitled "Women of Destiny," interspersed with musical numbers and interpreted by a reader. The supper is on the pot-luck plan each family bringing sandwiches, dishes and one article of prepared food.

On April second, a special Good Friday service with reception of members into the church and the celebration of the Lord's Supper will be held at 7:30 p. m., and will be about one hour in length.

A musical composition of great solemnity and beauty will be rendered by a double quartette, in a series of numbers interspersed with the pastor's leadership of the devotions. The composition is by James Percival Davis and is entitled: "The Office for the Holy Communion," set to music in the key of G.

The following is the order of the service:

1. Doxology, Invocation—Gloria.
2. Commandments—Kyrie Eleison", responses.
3. Invitation and Promise—"Gloria tibi."
4. Witnesses and Thanksgiving—"Gratis tibi."
5. Confession of Faith—"Credo."
6. Vows of the Covenant—"Sursum Corda."
7. Story of the Last Supper—"Sanctus."
8. Distribution of Bread—"Benedictus."
9. Distribution of Wine—"Agnus Dei."
10. The Pathway of Christian Experience—"Gloria in Excelsis."

This service is for the general public as well as for all the members of the church and will be a tender and impressive presentation of the great realities of Christian experience. Every one interested is cordially invited.

Easter Sunday services will begin with the Christian Endeavor meeting at 7:00 a. m.

At the morning church service at 10:30 there will be special Easter music by the choir and the Easter sermon by the pastor on the theme "The Sequel of Life's Continued Story."

Tuesday, April 13th, is the date set for the County Normal comedy, "Under the Laurels." Be at the Palace Theatre that night.—Adv. 13-t1.

PRODUCT DIRECT TO THE CONSUMER

Northern Creamery Co. Establishes Detroit Branch

Charlevoix and Grand Traverse region dairy products now go direct from this region to the Detroit consumer with but one handling and but one profit, through an arrangement recently completed by the Northern Creamery Co.

This firm has purchased on established dairy product distribution business in Detroit and has placed Frank Needham, former Traverse City man, in charge. Mr. Needham has been in Detroit nearly all winter getting the business lined up.

Dairy products manufactured in the company's Traverse City plant and also in its branch plants through northern Michigan are shipped directly to the Detroit distributing plant and there are sold direct to the consumer. These products include butter, eggs and the other farm products which the concern buys.

Notice to Truck Owners and Drivers

Owing to present road conditions, especially during the spring thaw, and until further notice, all truck loads must not exceed one-half of the normal allowable pay load. This ruling covers all County Roads and State Trunk Lines. Violations of this order will be subject to the penalties prescribed by law.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS PLAN BIG EVENT

Banquet to Be Followed by Hitchcock, the Humorist

Pine Lake Lodge No. 122, Knights of Pythias, are planning for a big time to be held at the Castle Hall on Friday evening, April 9. There will be a banquet at 6:30 o'clock, followed by a program on which Charles Hitchcock, humorist and impersonator, will be the chief entertainer.

CHARLES HITCHCOCK

The writer with several other Charlevoix men, were present at the time Mr. Hitchcock appeared before the Elks lodge in Petoskey last fall, and were more than delighted with his entertainment. He is simply a "scream" and furnished a solid hour of entertainment that is still fresh in our minds.

The banquet and entertainment will be a stag affair, not confined wholly to members of the K. of P. lodge. East Jordan, Boyne City and other neighboring lodges are invited. The sale of tickets will run a trifle over a hundred. If you need cheering up, Hitchcock is the greatest dispeller of the "blues" on the Redpath program. Get your ticket early—we guarantee you will be pleased with the entertainment. Dr. W. W. Mitchell, Milton Block, Oakley Hammond and Oral Lewis are in charge of the ticket sales.

STANDS SECOND PLACE IN STATE

Rex Supernaw Makes Wonderful Record for Young Lad

Charlevoix has a young lad who has won about as many records in Calf Club Work as one boy is entitled to. Rex Supernaw, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Supernaw, is the one we refer to. The record Rex has made is as follows:

Second place in Boys' and Girls' Dairy Club Work in Michigan.

Seventh place out of 48 boys in cattle judging contest at Detroit.

First prize Jersey at Charlevoix County fair.

Grand Champion prize at Charlevoix County fair.

Granted a free trip to the State Fair last fall for his accomplishments.

This is a splendid record for a boy of his age. It demonstrates in a manner the work of the County Boy's and Girl's Calf Club, sponsored by our county agent and backed by local business men.

DANCING PARTY WAS LARGELY ATTENDED

Charleston Contest a Feature of Enjoyment on Program

A large crowd enjoyed the dancing and card party given last Wednesday evening at the K. of P. hall.

One of the main features of the evening was the Charleston contest, and although the contestants were few in number, their exhibitions were good and highly enjoyed by the audience. Miss Lillian Kaye and Ina Genett were warded first prizes for ladies, Miss Knye receiving a beautiful pair of silk hose donated by M. A. Levinson, and Miss Genett a handsome hand-painted jar of Morris chocolates donated by F. J. Fessenden. Lyle Beaudoine won the men's first prize; an Eversharp pencil, donated by the Central Drug Store. Mrs. Stelter's four-piece orchestra furnished excellent music.

THEY TOOK A DARE— BUT IT WAS CHILLY

Local Boys Welcome to Claim Set on First Swim of Season

Two local young men, Charles Bellinger and Donald Swinton, lay claim to being the first bathers in local waters this season, not accidentally, but willingly.

Last Sunday the young men took George Gindos up on a wager when he offered them a hot chocolate if they would take the icy dip. They evidentally didn't believe in refusing to take a "dare," so donned their bathing suits and hiked to the channel in back of the Alhambra Hotel, where they proceeded to carry out their wager. Swinton ducked in the water all over, but Bellinger went him one better by swimming out into the channel and back through the floating ice. We are informed that it took several hot chocolates to thaw them out.

You are invited to an evening of fun at the Palace Theatre, April 13th, when the Normal class presents "Under the Laurels."—Adv. 13-t1.

Joe Gallagher on Death Boat

Joe E. Gallagher of St. James, was one of the crew of the fishing boat Uncle Sam, fishing for perch and herring off Chicago, when Captain Oscar Osmondson was killed while oiling the propeller shaft last week. Joe writes to a friend that a set screw caught the captain. The uncle Sam drifted with flag at halfmast until rescued by the coast guard. Chicago firemen were called to release the skipper's body.

Measure of the Great

Great men are the ambassadors of Providence sent to reveal to their fellow men their unknown selves. There is something about them better than they do or say. If measured at all, they are to be measured in the responsive action of what others do or say. They come and go, in part a mystery, in part the simplest of all experience, the compelling influence of truth. They leave no successor. The heritage of greatness descends to the people.—Calvin Coolidge.

Book Borrowers

All of us suffer from people who borrow our books and then forget to return them. In time we cannot remember what has become of the missing volumes. Keep a card or small notebook at hand near the bookshelves and each time a book is borrowed jot down the title, the borrower and the date. Then when a reasonable length of time has elapsed do not hesitate to ask for the return of the book.

Honor From Reproach

Many words used as terms of contempt and reproach have since become titles of honor. Both the Methodist and the Quakers were so called in contempt, as indeed were the Puritans and the Roundheads. It must not be forgotten either that the word "Christian" was a term of contempt, first used in Antioch by the enemies of the new religion.

NEW PALACE THEATRE

ATTRACTIONS FOR THE COMING WEEK

Saturday and Sunday, April 3 and 4

Mary Aster and Clive Brook in "ENTICEMENT." Enticement! A magic word. A magic power for the woman who has it. Kings fall for it—it has swayed the destinies of empires and homes—and what is it? This is a love drama—a drama of an enticing beauty who swayed hearts—and in her own circle swayed a Kingdom of love.

The comedy is entitled, "Cupid A La Carte." We will also have an educational picture, "The Conductor." These educational pictures are worth seeing. Your children should see them.

Tuesday and Wednesday, April 6 and 7

Alice Joyce and Warner Baxter in "MANNEQUIN." A beautiful cloak model striving for love and happiness but snared in the jazz pitfalls of a great city. See her heart gripping story revealed on the screen by the master-director, James Cruze. The $50,000.00 prize winner of the Liberty Magazine.

Also a Fox News Reel. Travel the world with the news reels. The very best form of travel.

This Boom in Lake Frontage

It will make n few people rich. The same boom will send city property values kiting. Witness the Floridn towns.

Let's not overlook that.

Money mnking city property is to be had now, chnply. Never agnin will there be such a chance.

Just mark that.

PORTO BELLO GOLD

By Arthur D. Howden Smith

Copyright by Arthur D. Howden Smith
WNU Service

pose is the opening between Hispaniola and Porto Rico.

"My intent is that the Royal James shall ply off the westerly mouth of the passage from about the end of August, avoiding all intercourse with shipping and keeping as far out to sea as is practicable. When Diego appears we will restrict the space of our beat, and 'twill be impossible for the treasure ship to escape us. If she runs we can catch her, and at fighting I can take any don under a ship-o'-the-line."

"So much I heard you declare to Colonel O'Donnell aboard the brig," I said. "But what comes next? You take the Santissima Trinidad—and then?"

He moved his forefinger over the surface of the map and brought it to rest in front of a tiny outline sketched in ink on the expanse of sea east of Cuba and somewhat to the north of Hispaniola. Northward of this spot stretched the far-flung myriads of the Bahamas.

"That is what you have heard Flint and me refer to as the Rendezvous, and Spyglass Island," he answered. "It has other names, I believe. Some have called it Treasure Island, although I know of no treasure upon it. 'Tis said that Kidd discovered it, and certes, others of the old-time buccaneers were wont to maintain themselves there. We are bound thither now to refit and careen, and when we have the treasure safe under hatches we will return to the island to divide it and convert arrangements for delivering their share to Colonel O'Donnell's friends."

"What will Flint say to your fetching in strangers to your hiding place?" I asked.

A furrow deepened betwixt my great-uncle's lambent eyes.

"He'll not like it, Robert," he admitted. "I have O'Donnell's word to betray none of our secrets, and indeed 'tis to his own interest to keep hidden his part in this affair; but Flint may well make trouble. 'Tis a determined dog, and a greedy. Look you, boy, will you stand by me in the affair? For the girl's sake, if for no other reason?"

"Why not leave her aboard the treasure ship?"

He regarded me askance.

"It may be we must sink—"

I started up.

"Now, that I'll ha' naught to do with! I ha' told you I'd fight if you butchered the defenseless."

He waved me back.

"Peace, peace! We cannot carry off all the Spaniards in any case, and—"

He hesitated.

"—O'Donnell must be protected," he concluded.

"Against what?"

"Wagging tongues. I tell you his part must never be known. The Santissima Trinidad disappears, and with her the treasure and all her company. There's no other way."

"Take the treasure, if you must," I retorted; "but do not stain your hands with the blood of men who have not harmed you."

"I must slay some of them, in all probability," returned my great-uncle. "What difference between that and slaying all?"

I remembered the thrill of reprobation with which even the most devoted adherents of King George had heard of the butchery of the Scots wounded after Culloden.

"There's but one thing to do," I said. "You must make pretense of bearing off the daughter, and you can imprison the father, too, in order to silence his objections."

"A fit role for a pirate captain," mused my great-uncle. "El Capitan Rrrip-Itrrap and how he devoured the virgin! I can hear the stories that will be told in the Havana wine-shops. But I must have my price, Robert. If I spare such Spaniards as escape our great guns and the boarding-cutlasses,' will you agree to stand back of me in the division of the spoils with Flint?"

"I'll not become lieutenant in your piracies, if that be your meaning," I returned.

"No; my meaning is plain, boy. I wish you and Peter to help me to get clear of Flint with the O'Donnells and their portion of the treasure."

"But why return to the Rendezvous at all? Bear off with the O'Donnells and land them and their treasure before you deliver Flint his share."

"'Tis not so simple as all that. The action with the Santissima Trinidad will require cannonading, and that will be heard. Probably we shall be seen sailing away. We may be pursued. The surviving Spaniards, whom you will have me spare, will speedily have their frigates after us. We must remain under cover for a period."

"Very well," I said. "I will do what you ask for the maid's sake—if Peter is willing."

"Ja," assented Peter.

Murray caught my hand in a quick, firm clasp.

"Good!" he cried. "'Twill be the first o' many times we stand shoulder to shoulder. Ah, Robert, I ha' dreamed a splendid dream, and any man who helps in its achievement will not have lived in vain. We'll take this gold and build an avenue of victories for the king's ride to Whitehall. What will we not do? We'll rouse the claymores from the hills! We'll carry the Irish brigade to London town! We'll fetch home the Wild Geese from their haunts of exile! We'll ha' the beacon fires ablaze from end to end of the Three Kingdoms! And the White Cockade over all!

"There'll be no talk of pirates then! 'Twill be my lord duke of Jedburgh, marquis of Cobbielaw and Earl and Baron Broomfield, aye, and an English peerage to boot. We'll ride high, Robert—aye, with the highest!"

He broke off short, and the glow in his eyes charred out.

"'Tis not a bad vision for a wicked old man to dream; eh, boy? Remember it when you hear the crowds a-cheering us in the Strand."

CHAPTER VIII

The Island

One day was like another aboard the Royal James, although to a landsman the routine of duties, work and varying weather was charred with unending interest. My great-uncle held his pack of wolves on a short leash and exacted from them all the efficiency of a man-o'-war's company.

Each morning he inspected the ship from stem to stern, accompanied by his officers, and he was not slow to administer rebukes for shortcomings or oversights. Later in the forenoon the men were exercised at the great guns, and in the afternoon there was pike and cutlass drill. The watch was rigorously maintained.

My great-uncle was particular that I should be well garbed, and forced upon me several suits of his abundant wardrobe which were given the necessary alterations by a former journeyman tailor who had escaped from Newgate on the eve of execution for the murder of a scolding wife. He would have done as much for Peter also; but the Dutchman refused to be parted from his salt-stained buckskin shirt and leggings; and an odd figure Corlaer made, in all conscience, striding the decks of the Royal James in the costume of a forest-runner, even to the knife and hatchet hung on either thigh.

To the west of the Bermoothes—within sight of which we never came—we encountered the Walrus again, Flint having had substantially the same experience as ourselves, and thenceforth we continued in company. We were eleven weeks out of New York when a cluster of rocky peaks soared above the heat-haze dead ahead.

My great-uncle, after a single squint through his object-glass, handed the instrument to me.

"'Tis the Island," he said. "I'd know those peaks anywhere."

The double lens etched distinctly a rugged spread of land, shelving up out of the sea from a succession of yellow beaches on the east to a series of small hills which culminated in a range of considerable height along the westward side, running almost due north and south. The interior seemed to be heavily forested; the trees climbed the mountains to within the last few hundred feet of their summits, which were bare rock, precipitous in the case of the midmost and highest, a cloud-hung giant which dominated the island.

Nearing its shores, I descried the tangled masses of trees which clothed most of its surface. A few conifers shot up to goodly stature, but the greater part of the forest growth was gnarled, wind-tortured dwarfs, misshapen abortions of trees. The whole effect of the place seen from offshore was sinister and forbidding, repulsive as the silent ferocity which emanated from the blind man Pew.

My great-uncle turned over the conduct of the ship to Martin and crossed to where Peter and I stood, staring about us.

"Starboard, Master Martin!" called my great-uncle as he joined Peter and me. "Starboard your helm, if you please. Aye, on to this shoal here. We shall have three fathoms and less to careen in. Bid them drop the anchor."

Martin bawled an order. A whistle piped, and there was a great clatter and rustling of rope running loose, a mighty splash that drove the birds in tumult into the air; and the Royal James swung to her cable close under the lesser island's shore. My great-uncle waved one hand over the bulwark.

"Skeleton Island this is called, Robert," he said. "I tell you because you demonstrate so grewsome an interest in the more horrifying episodes of our past. But I regret I must confess that I know of no authentic detail to account for the nomenclature. Pirates have a way of naming a spot to suit themselves, without rime or reason, if the fancy once moves them."

"May we land?" I answered, ignoring his gibe.

"Suit yourselves," he returned with a shrug. "I must have all my men bnay aboard here, however, and can spare none to guide you."

"Ja, ja," urged Peter. "We shoodt some goats, eh?"

"If you please," agreed Murray. "Ben Gunn will find you a brace of light muskets preferable to our rack-blunderbusses. I'll have the gig put overside, and you may row yourselves, if you will. I desire above all things, Robert, to deal gently with you. Therefore I ask you to believe I am considering your own safety when I require your promise to be aboard again not later than an hour after sundown."

"Why, what harm—"

The Walrus slatted past us, her canvas in a slovenly mess alow and aloft, a dozen men bawling orders and counter-orders from poop, waist and fo'csle, Flint in his red coat strutting the poop and adding his own bellow to the din whenever the confusion showed signs of dissolving.

My great-uncle's eyes strayed across the narrow gap of water betwixt the two vessels.

"Well, damme, it's been a —— of a voyage, Murray!" shouted Flint.

"We are here," returned my great-uncle urbanely.

"Aye, and what to do wi' ourselves?" Flint called back. "Blast me for a —— —— —— if I can see what five hundred —— —— —— are to do wi' months on their hands, and naught but rum-drinking' and quarrellin' for diversion."

"There's your ship to clean, man," replied Murray. "She needs it."

Flint answered with a curse.

My great-uncle indulged in one of his essentially Gallic shrugs and dusted a pinch of snuff into his nostrils.

"Captain Flint doth not agree with me, it seems. But to return to your question. You were about to ask me what harm could befall you ashore. I answer you that I do not know, but that in all candid truth we are here, to quote my associate, some 'five hundred —— —— ——,' and accidents may happen. Therefore, I suggest that you be aboard not later than an hour after sunset. On second thoughts, Robert, I regret that I shall be unable to permit you to leave the ship save upon your parole on those terms."

"You have it," I answered shortly, and followed Peter down the side-cleats into the gig.

We rowed up the estuary for the mouth of the little river which we had seen from the James' deck, and our course took us under the yellow hull of the Walrus. A shrill voice hailed from a gunport, and Darby McGraw's red head was thrust out beside the frowning black muzzle.

"Glory be, Master Noh, and do they let ye go free wherever ye will? Sure it's yourself must be one o' the grand favorites over yon. Are ye an officer yet?"

I was about to answer him when Flint gloomed down at us from the towering poop.

"Come aboard here, my hearty," Flint hailed me.

"We are going ashore," I answered; "and I have reason to hasten."

Flint scowled.

"Well, ye'll come soon enough. And when I get ye I'll learn ye a thing or two! There's too much politics and favoritism aboard the James to suit me, and ye can tell your great-uncle or granddaddy or whatever he may be, that John Flint says so!"

Darby bobbed up on the poop beside him very much out of breath.

"Troth, he's no more'n the old master's son that I worked for in New York, captain darlin', and him that good to me always I had a main likin' for him, indeed and indeed I did! And I'm fair crazy to be ashore after the weeks and months we'll ha'—"

Flint clapped him on the shoulder, abruptly jovial.

"Ah, if it's shore you'd be that's a different matter," says he. "I'm for goin' ashore myself. Bill, call all hands away for the boats, and we'll have a grand goat-hunt up Spyglass. Oliver shall barbecue 'em for us. And break out a couple o' casks o' rum. Lively now, my lads! We'll enjoy ourselves like the honest pirates we are!"

A frenzy of cheering answered him, and I backed water with my oars.

"You heard, Peter?" I said over my shoulder.

"Ja; dot's bndt."

"We can't go where they do."

"Neen."

We ran our boat aground on a sandy bank on the far side of a point which concealed us from the Walrus. Then we took our guns and walked inland through the trees up a graduated sandy slope to the top of a little hillock.

"This would be a good place for a fort," I mused.

"Ja," said Peter. "You got water, too."

He pointed to a streak of green vegetation along the sandy slope of the knoll which we traced to a spring issuing from the summit.

"Now we got water, we better eat," he added.

"But what about the goats?" I cried. "We were to—"

"No," he insisted stubbornly; "ve don't shoodt. If we shoodt, der pirates hear us and come. We vaidt until they are all ashore. Then we go back to Murray."

"I'll not be driven from the first pleasure we have had in months," I protested childishly.

"We do it again," replied Peter placidly. "Next time Murray he come wit' us himself, ja."

"Yes, but—"

"Now you be sensible, Bob. Der Injuns is goodt friendts beside them fellers, ja. We go back to der James. Soon all o' them be ashore and drunk. Drunk, they like to kill us, but they can't row—neen."

MRS. CHARLES ARNOLD HOSTESS TO FRIENDS

Fourteen Attended Very Enjoyable Party Monday

Mrs. Charles Arnold entertained fourteen of her friends with a thimble party, at her home Monday evening. Each one of the ladies brought some sewing or fancy work and the evening was pleasantly spent in visiting.

After dainty refreshments had been served, the hostess announced that each guest should tell a story, (not necessarily a true one,) sing a song, or propound at least two riddles. Two or three of the ladies refused to "come across," with either song or story, but the majority of them did in splendid style. Much merriment followed the telling of some of the stories and riddles. At a late hour, the party adjourned and all agreed to having spent a most enjoyable evening.

FIRST SPIRITUALIST CHURCH OF CHARLEVOIX

Organization Formed and Officers Were Elected

Several Spiritualists of Charlevoix got together, and sent for a Medium from Grand Rapids to come here and hold some meetings. In response to the call Mrs. Bessie Casterline, one of Michigan's best in healing and clairvoyant work, arrived here on Tuesday, March 23.

Many people interested in this work meet at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Coblentz, at 905 Bridge St., to welcome Mrs. Casterline.

On Wednesday evening a meeting was held at the Moose hall, and although a very stormy night, a good audience attended. Mrs. Castarline in a trance state, gave a very fine lectura using the 15th chapter af 1st Corintbians, 39th to 58th verses, after which very convincing messages were given to many, and many there who had been told Spiritualists did not use the Bible were very surprised and pleased to find out they do.

On Thursday evening the Spiritulists met again with Mr. and Mrs. Coblentz where they organized a church body to be known in the future as The First Spiritulist Church of Charlevoix. There are twenty-five members and all are good workers. Harry Coblentz, president; R. J. Nowland, vice president; Irma McCall, secretary; Robert Howe, treasurer; Julia Ackert, trustee and Peter John, trustee.

On Friday night another meeting was held at the Moose hall, with a nice attendance, after which several friends went up to the Coblentz home and had a very inspiring evening. While Mrs. Casterline was here every courtesy was shown her by city officials and business people.

The Spiritulists in Charlevoix have sure had a Spiritual feast and are looking forward to the return of Mrs. Casterline the 12th of April.

Many who have never attended Spiritulists meetings were convinced by the wonderful phenomena given through the organization of this medium and the healing demonstrations proved very successful.

Mrs. Casterline asked me through this column to thank the friends of Charlevoix for their kindness to her and will be glad to see all when she returns again to hold meetings to which all are welcome to come and investigate at any time. So don't forget April 12th.—Press Correspondent.

OSCAR NELSON MARRIED AT NILES

Wedded March 15 to Miss Trim Handahl of Chicago

The following articles taken from the Mancelona Herald, will be of interest to friends of those mentioned:

"Oscar Nelson of Detroit and Miss Trim Handahl of Chicago were quietly married at the home of Mr. nnd Mrs. J. H. Quam of Niles, Mich., at high noon Monday, March 15, 1926, by the Rev. Hibbick of St. Johns church.

"The groom is a former Mancelona boy, a veteran of the A. E. F. He is a retired officer of the Detroit police deparment, having been wounded in a gun duel with a thug. He and his team mate succeeded in getting their man after both had been badly wounded. His partnar died shortly after from his injuries.

"Mrs. Nelson has been in the employ of Mr. and A. H. Loeb of Chicago and Charlevoix for the past 14 years, and it was in Charlevoix where Mr. Nelson was recuperating from his wounds that Cupid sent darts that had a sequel in the marriage last Monday.

"Mr. and Mrs. Nelson will make their home in Detroit for the present but will spend their summer in Charlevoix, and this fall will take a honey-moon trip to Mrs. Nelson's old home in Bergin, Norway."

PREVENT CHOLERA AMONG SWINE HERD

Approximately 4 per cent of the hogs on farms in the United States died of cholera last year, says the United States Department of Agriculture. In round numbers the loss amounted to 2,250,000 hogs valued at approximately $29,393,000. Nine states each lost more than 100,000 head of hogs from the disease.

While the disease is highly contagious and is difficult to control, the losses have been much higher than they should be, since a preventive serum is available, say department experts. This serum, used before animals get sick, combined with strict sanitation and thorough disinfection after outbreaks, is the most effective known control measure.

Dr. C. C. Lipp, a South Dakota veterinarian, urges a thorough cleanup if it has not already been done. All accumulations of cobs must be burned. Then remove the manure to fields where no hogs are allowed. If possible, the lots should stand vacant during the winter. Plow all yards early in the spring and give the hogs new temporary pastures for a time. Sprinkle the yards as soon as they are clear with air-slaked lime.

After yards have been cleaned and disinfected, the pens must get similar treatment. Scrape out all manure, feed and dried accumulations with a hoe or spade. Then spray floors, troughs, walls and partitions with a solution of sheep dip made by adding twelve tablespoonfuls of dip to each gallon of water. Use a spray pump if possible because it drives the disinfectant into the cracks and corners. Repeat the process at frequent intervals, allowing free circulation of air and plenty of sunshine. After completing the disinfecting the entire interior of the house should be thoroughly whitewashed.

Such a cleaning is not expensive and greatly reduces the probability of cholera next year. Even though no disease has been present on the place during the past season such a process is well worth while.

Essential Fall Factors for Success With Pigs

A special effort should be made at this season to keep the fall litters growing and thrifty. The sows and pigs should be furnished with shelter from the cold rains and the cold nights. Experience has shown purebred breeders that they cannot rely on the temperate winters and that shelter will prevent pneumoaln, bad colds, and general unthriftiness. A moderate quantity of straw or leaves should be used for bedding—not so much that the pigs will not be able to get out of the sow's way.

When the pigs are old enough to eat feed them in a creep. A little shelled corn or skim milk is a good feed to start them on. Extra feed pays at this time, the animal husbandrymen at Clemson college say, because the pigs are making a cheap gain and will be in good condition for weaning. Forage can be supplied at this time by rye and rape. It is especially desirable to have enough forage to carry the sows and pigs until freezing weather. If forage is not available, a more liberal use of a good protein supplement is necessary at this time because the hogs are depending upon the feeder for their supply.

Don't feed lice. A little time and trouble will rid the house and hogs of these parasites. Crude oil or a good coal-tar dip will give results.

Sows After Farrowing

The sows should be made to take some exercise and should be fed a mineral preparation consisting of 40 per cent lime, 40 per cent homemeal or similar material, and 20 per cent common salt. To this may be added .05 to .1 of a pound of sodium or potassium iodide for every 100 pounds of the other ingredients.

The sow will get along best if she is not fed the first 24 hours after farrowing. Her first feed can well be the bran and shorts which she was getting before she farrowed.

Live Stock Hints

A horse eats nearly five tons a year.

If his head is left free, a horse that stumbles is less likely to fall.

There appears to be an economy in trying to raise pigs without grain.

Extra lima speat with sows when due to farrow will pay big wages. Put in part of the night in the hog barn when necessary.

Lice should never be permitted to remain on the hogs any longer than their presence is known.

Under water conditions fish meal is worth relatively more in comparison with tankage than when the pigs are on pasture. Likewise it has a relatively higher feeding value for young pigs than for well-grown shoats.

METHODIST CHURCH

This Thursday evening, there will be a great service of fellowship. One feature of the evening will be the presentation of the Passion Week and Easter lesson with beautiful scenes thrown on the screen. A sermon on the subject, "It is finished" will be given by the pastor of the church.

Friday evening, which is Good Friday evening, a unique service, suited to the occasion, will be presented. Each person who attends will be given a beautiful copy of Hoffman's "Christ in the Garden." The sermon will be built around the lesson of the picture, and its subject will be "Farther." Don't miss this service.

Easter Sunday will be fittingly observed. At the morning watch service, which comes at 6:00 a. m., there will be Holy Communion and choral singing. Baptisms and preliminary church receptions may also be cared for at this hour.

At 10:30 a. m. the pastor will bring the Easter message. In this service those who have been received into the church by the present pastor will be given a beautiful certificate of church membership. It is desired that every auch person be present at this time. These certicates are for all who have been received since last September, regardless of whether their reception was by letter, confession of faith or from preparatory membership.

An Easter Cantata, "The Crucified" by George B. Nevin under the direction of Mrs. Archie Belding, will be rendered at the hour of evening worship. This is a fine rendition of the Easter thought, from a biblical viewpoint. It consists of solos, choruses and duets.

In addition to the Cantata rendered by the choir a rich program will be rendered by the Sunday school preceding the Cantata. This consists of an Easter service of great interest, entitled "Daybreak." The evening promises to be a wonderful time of thought and worship. The public is invited to any and all of these hours of worship.

BAPTIST CHURCH

Easter morning we will return to our auditorium, which has been thoroughly renovated and been made attractive and far more sanitary than it has been for the past few months. The old carpet did many years of good faithful service, but like all old things must go into the discard. Those who worship with us will enjoy and appreciate the change.

The Easter program will be rendered at the hour of morning worship and be followed by the usual session of the Bible school. The various departments of the school will give the program. One feature will be the collection of the Easter banks and Easter offering. This will carry us way over the top with our missionary offering for the year. A splendid achievement.

The Easter preaching service will be held in the evening. We will then celebrate the greatest event in the world's history. Everyone who has been buried with Him and raised to a new life should give enthusiasm to this celebration.

The pastor and wife are very grateful to the church and community for the many expressions of sympathy received during the latter's illness. No kinder people live in any community than those who make their homes in Charlevoix. We have seen a real demonstration of it. In our gratitude we would like to serve as we have been served.

More Work of Vandals

Mrs. J. J. Howe, who last week returned from Chicago after spending the winter with her children, reports that during her absence her home, Cozy Nook Farm, on M-11 about four miles south of the city, had been broken into and numerous articles stolen and destroyed. Such vandalism as this is a disgrace to the community and the ones who are mixed in it should be given a lesson not soon to be forgotten.

Robert Mitchell Gives John Zeitler Close Run for Office of Park Commissioner

Seems that Charlevoix voters, especially in the second and third wards, simply can't get over the habit of using election stickers. The mess we were in at the March primary seems to have resulted in the voters of these wards acquiring the habit—we hope not permanently.

Robert J. Madill of the second ward and W. E. Parmelee of the third ward, aldermatic candidates for re-election, were the ones to go down under the avalanche of stickers. They were defeated by Ernest P. Howe and Gelk C. Geiken. This will be Mr. Howe's first entrance into the political arena, while Geiken has held city offices at various times as far back as we can remember.

Robert Mitchell gave John Zeitler a close race for park commissioner, Zeitler winning out by only 26 votes. The balance of the election was a peaceful affair, the entire ticket as printed being elected.

PLANS APPROVED FOR ROUND LAKE DOCKS

Nine Landing Places to Be Provided for Yachtsmeo

Pleasure yachts nnd amall water craft cruising northern Michigan waters will find nmple dockage space at Charlevoix this year for the first time.

Tuesday avening the council approved plans drawn by K. M. Walker for yacht piers to be built on Round Lake between Mason nnd Antrim streets. The plans eall for five piers making nine landing places. This does not include the present city owned dock at the foot of Mason street, which will be lengthened 30 feet, making it 100 feet in length after completion.

The council will nsk for bids on construetion work at an early date, tha pending improvements to be completed and ready for the 1926 season. Public improvements of this eharaeter deserve hearty commendation, and should be endorsed by all people who have the best interests of the community at heart.

MILTON BLOCK INSTALLING NEW ICE MACHINE

Great Saving Will Be Effected By Refrigeratiog Plant

Milton Block has recently purchased a new Frankenberg refrigerating machine which is now being installed and will be ready for use in a few days.

The machine, manufactured by the Frankenberg Refrigerating Machine Co., of Milwaukee, Wis., operates by electricity, ammonla gas being the refrigerating principle. It la of 2 ton capacity, or in other worda, will develop as much refrigeration in one day aa 2 tons of ordinary lake ice in an equal length of time. Aa the average amount of ice required and used by Mr. Block will run around three tons per week, lt can readily be seen what a saving will be effected in the cost of refrigeration. The machine is automatic and will hold any even temperature at which it is set, it being possible to have any temperature desired.

An additional cooler has been built in the rear room of the store to take care of the extra summer business and the refrigerating machine will be piped to the show cases used for displaying meat, fruit and vegetables.

PROBATE JUDGE MAKES REPORT

PROCEEDINGS BEGUN IN ONE HUNDRED SEVEN CASES

Judge Answers Questioo Whether Boy is Community Asset or a Liahility

Report of the proceedinga of the probate eourt for Charlevoix eounty for the year ending December 31st, 1925. One hundred and seven proceedings begun and they are as follows:

Eighteen testate estates.

Twenty-four intestate estates.

Twelve estate of deceased persons disposed of by determinatlon of heirs.

Fifteen petitions filed for the admission of persons to the Traverse City state hospital as insane. Three of the petitions were dismissed for the reason that the examining physicians would not certify to insanity of the patient; twelve were committed.

Seven guardians have been appointed for minors, and six for mentally incompetent persons.

Six adult afflicted persons sent to the University hospital at Ann Arbor for treatment, and twelve children.

Four declarations of adoption filed for the purpose of adopting children under the statute. Two of them succeeded and two failed.

Three petitions filed for admission of patients to the home for tha Feeble Minded at Lapeer, Michigan. Order was made admitting two of the patients, and proceedings abandoned in one ease.

Report of the proceedings in the juvenile division of said court: During the year two commitments have been made to the Boys' Vocational school at Lansing, Michigan. Five delinquent children have been placed on probation and in each case they have not violated the orders of the court. One deliquent, on motion of the prosecuting attorney, the probate court waived jurisdiction and he was bound over to circuit court to answer to any information there filed against him.

Sixteen petitions were filed asking for a mother's pension. Eight were dismissed and eight were granted. The eight that were granted furnish relief to thirty children.

During the year inheritance tax was determined in six eatates and the total amount of tax was four thousand three hundred and sixty-one dollar and eighty-three cents.

Some one has asked the question, "What is a boy worth to a community?" That depends on whether he is a Lincoln or a Chapman. Whether he is a statesman or a gunman. The one is an asset to a community, the other a liability.

Well Known Resorter Dead

Word comes from Cincinnati, Ohio, of the death last month of S. Koninski, for a number of years a Charlavoix summer resident. For several seasons Mr. Kinmski and family occupied the Campbell eottage, opposite the Beach Hotel, and was well known among our summer eolony.

HIGHWAY NAMES BEING REVISED

"EMMA LEVEN" IS NOW KNOWN AS U. S. 31

System of National Highways To Enable Tourists To Travel With Less Coofusioo

"M-11" which has just become familiar to motorists of Michigan as a term used to describe the important state highway extending along the west shore of the state, is soon to be forgotten in favor of a term of a larger meaning and that term will be "U S. 31."

After years of study and preparation, the Federal Bureau of Public Roads and State Highway Departments have adopted a system of national highways, whereby tourists mny travel from one state to another, over long distances without being confused by a different system of marking.

The numbering plan uses even numbers on east and west routes, and old numbers on north and south routes.

"U. S. 23" begins at Mackinaw City and follows the present M-10 through Alpena, to Saginaw and Flint, thence southerly over M-65 through Fenton, and one southerly between Ann Arbor and Ypsilanti to Toledo, Ohio, and thence to Portsmouth, Ohio, where it intersects U. S. 20 extending from Boston, Mass., to Portland, Oregon.

Route No. 2

Route No. 2 originates in Houton, Maine, crosses New Ham Hampshire, Vermont and passes out of New York at Rouses Point, jumps over Ontario and follows Michigan 12 from Sault Ste. Marie through Manistique, Escanaba, Iron Mountain; thence extends westerly through Duluth, Grand Forks and ends at Benners Ferry, Idaho.

Route No. 10 begins at Detroit and passes through Pontiac, Flint, Saginaw, Midland and Ludington, jumps Lake Michigan to Manitowac, Wisconsin, and ends at Miles City, Montana. This route follows portions of M-10 and M-24 and M-20 in Michigan.

Old "Emma Eleven"

U. S. 31, now M-11 (West Michigan Pike) extends from Mackinaw City southerly through Manistee, Ludington, Muskegon, Grand Haven to St. Joseph; thence southerly to South Bend, Indiana and Indianapolis, Indiana, Louisville, Nashville and Birmingham to Mobile, Alabama.

U. S. 27 begins at Cheboygan nnd extends southerly to Lansing on present M-14; thence over M-29 to Charlotte, Marshall nnd Coldwater; thence southerly through Fort Wayne and Richmond, Indiana, to Cincinnati, Ohio.

U. S. 131 extends from Traverse City southerly through Cadillac, Grand Rapids, Kalamazoo to White Pigeon where it intersects U. S. 112 already mentioned.

QUESTION OF WET OR DRY

DO THE PEOPLE WANT LIGHT WINE AND BEER?

If the Majority Want it, They Can Have it By Proper and Legal Methods

The minority does. The majority does not. If the majority want it, it can have it by proper and legal methods. The majority has spoken its mind on this subject, not once but repeatedly; not in straw votes but in official ballots, and that majority has banned light wine and und beer as well as whisky and brandy. The majority adopted prohihition in 33 states by state law with no clause exempting beer and wine. 95 per cent of the territory of the nation was dry and 68 per cent of the people lived in that dry area before the eighteenth amendment was adopted, and there was not a single prohibition law in this territory that exempted beer and light wine. When natioaal prohibition was adopted a majority in one branch of the Legislature in each of any 13 states could have prevented rntification if a beer and wine exemption had been favored. The vote of 28 Senators on August 1, 1917, would have prevented the Eighteenth Amendment from being suhmitted to the states, but it was impossible to find 28 Senators who did not know that the majority of the people wanted complete prohibition with no beer and wine exemption.

The referenda on beer and wine, when compared with the straw votes taken in the same states on this issue show where the real majority of the American citizens stand. The Literary Digest in 1922 took a poll which was carefully supervised to avoid repeating. In the poll California was shown as casting 20,479 votes for modification and 8,418 for repeal to the prohibition law, as against 15,565 votes for enforcement. A few weeks later the voters of California by a majority of 33,943 adopted the Wright law for prohibition enforcement gainst all the pleas of the wets.

Massachusetts llsted in this straw vote as casting a majority vote for modification but two years after the poll the official referendum on the state enforcement code showed the true majority was for enforcement. Ohio in a straw vote east 20,285 votes for enforcement against 25,511 for modification and repenl combined. Two months after poll, Ohio rejected a constitutional amendment for beer and wine by a mnjority of 189,472. Wyoming cast a two to one vote against prohibition in the straw vote of 1922 but gave a majority of 15,000 to a prohibition amendment to the state constitution.

The dry voters, generally do not participate in these unofficial polls, which have no weight and no effect. Those in favor of existing conditions hava nothing to gain by so doing. When Illinoia' wet organizations succeeded in placing on the ballot in 1922 a proposal to legalize heer and wine, the Anti-Saloon League urged voters to ignore this referendum since it proposed to legalize what was eontrary to the Eighteenth Amendment. The wets carried the meaningless referendum, but the drys continued to control the state legislature and elected more congressmen than ever before represented that state. The two Republican Congressmen-at-Large that year ran on a dry platform whlle their opponents ran on a beer and light wine platform. The candidates against beer and light wine, Congressmen Yates and Rathbone, won by over 200,000 majority. At the last election they won over their opponents advocating beer and wine by over 600,000. Such eleetions are the truer tests of public sentiment. Iowa showed a similar result in 1924 when the state elected for the first time a 100 per cent dry delegation to congress, although the Literary Digest poll in 1922 showed more voting for modification and for repeal than for enforcement.

In the 1924 elections, the wets endorsed 174 congressional cnndidates, of whom only 82 were elected. The drys elected 302 members who received their endorsement. The wets openly opposed 262 candidates for congress, of whom 219 were elected. Eight of the candidates for congress endorsed by the wets repudiated that endorsement or else had dry voting records. This was the latest referendum on beer and wine and prohibition enforcement. The issues involved in each of these congressional elections were clearly stated and the wet and dry question was emphasized so that there was no ambiguity or misunderstanding by the voter.

BOAT CLUB IS NOW A CERTAINTY

FORTY-TWO MEMBERSHIP PLEDGES SO FAR RECEIVED

Organization Will Be Great Asset to Charlevoix and Deserves Full Support

Plans for Charlevoix's boat club are progressing rapidly according to Mr. and Mrs. M. Roy Brndy, who are handling the organization of the new club.

According to original plans, F. E. Cartier, president of the local Association of Commerce, appointed Mr. Brady acting secretary-treasurer of the new organization at the meeting of the association held last Wednesday evening. Mr. Brady will act in this capacity until the election of officers has been completed, performing duties connected with the office and keeping records of all business transacted, such records to be turned over to the new officers when elected.

Requests for dues nre now being sent out to those who have heretofore pledged themselves to become members, and, upon receipt of same, a membership card will be returned. Forty-two pledges have been received to date, twelve of this number being local people, the remainder summer resorters. About twenty have paid in their dues and received their membership cards.

After all dues have been received, a complete list of paid members will be sent to each, with a request that they signify by mail their choice of officers for the year 1926-27. In this way officers for the club will be elected, also other matters of importance which eannot wait until the first meeting will he disposed of. The charter for the new organization is now in the hands of Mr. and Mrs. Brady nnd will be held for signatures hy the elected officers, after which it will be returned to the Department of State at Lansing.

As was stated before, twelve of the forty-two pledges so far received are Charlevoix citizens. It is hoped that this number will be raised to at least thirty. This new club can be made a great nsset to Charlevoix and its success depends upon the support given. Our summer visitors have responded generously and it is the duty of local eitizens to do the same.

TRAINING CAMP LOCATION BEEN CHANGED

Fort Brady at Sault Ste. Marie Decided Upon

The Citizens' Military Training camp for boys from northern Michigan, has been changed from Camp Custer near Battle Creek, to Fort Brady, nt the Soo.

The date is from July 30 to August 31. This arrangement should prove considerably more attractiva to those planning on attending the camp, as there are fine, modern barracks at Fort Brady.

MAIL TO ISLANDERS IS ASSURED

CAPT. DONNELLAN MADE FIRST TRIP MONDAY

Plane Will Be Here For Two Weeks At Least, Making Three Trips a Week

Through the concerted efforts of Postmaster Geo. W. Weaver and other local business men, Beaver Island is assured of mail service for the next two weeks at least.

Starting last Tuesday, when the first request was sent in to Washington for an aeroplane to carry mail to the isolated islanders, every possible pressure has been brought to bear upon government officials to get a plane here. Wires were sent to the assistant postmaster general, Congressman Frank Scott, Senator Ferris, and, through Booth Fisheries' Chicago office, to Secretary of Commerce Hoover, asking their cooperation and assistance in the matter.

Last Wednesdny word was received here that n plane would leave Chicago that day for Charlevoix. On nccount of some delay their departure was not made until Thursday morning when they took off at 2 o'clock a. m., flying as far as Lawtoa, Michigan, where they were forced down on account of gasoline shortage. Three days were spent by the flyers in Lawton, they being unable to raise from the field on account of heavy snow, thus delaying them until Sunday morning when they took off and flew to Grand Rapids. After leaving Grand Rapids one more stop was made on Lake Mitchell at Cadillac and from there they came on through to Charlevoix, making the trip from Grand Rapids here in two hours and thirty minutes, arriving on Pine Lake at 6 o'clock.

The plane, piloted hy Captain J. F. Donnellan, accompanied by Alvin Yeider, mechanic, is owned by the National Air Transit Co. of Chicago. Their purpose in making the flight was to survey a proposed route for a passenger nir line from Chicago to Marquette, to be inaugurated next summer, with stops at Grand Rapids, Charlevoix and Mackinac Island, and, if their services were desired, carry the mail to St. James while they were here.

Captain Donnellan made the first trip with mail to the island Monday afternoon, taking off at 1:50 p. m. Captain John McCann accompanied him as guide and about four hundred pounds of first class mail was taken. They made the trip around by Cross Village, landing in St. James harbor without any difficulty, returning to Charlevoix at about five o'clock. The islanders were found to he well supplied with provisions nnd apparently lacking in nothing except communication with the outside world.

Monday evening, Postmaster Weaver received a telegram from Washington, authorizing him to hold tha plane here for six trips. Three trips a week will he made for the next two weeks. Mr. Weaver and those instrumental in putting the project accross are to be congratulated on their success.

STEAMER JAMES B. SANFORD CHANGES HANDS

Mail Contract to St. James Involved in Transaction

Captain James E. Sanford, well known lake captain aad resident of this city, closed a deal Monday morning disposing of his passenger and freight steamer, James E. Sanford, to Captain John N. Chambers of Chicago, formerly of Mackinae Island.

Captain Chamber's nephaw Thomas G. Chambers, who is also a party in the purchase, will act as first officer on the boat under the new ownership. Included in the sale is the government mail contract between Charlevoix and St. James, which runs out June 30, 1927. It is announced by the new owners that in nddition to the regular run to tha island, side trips will be made for public accommodation. Captain Sanford has moved his personal belongings from the boat and the new owners took immediate possession.

Watch Your Breakfast

Start every day with food that "stands by" you

HOW you feel all morning depends largely on what you eat for breakfast. Thousands have been energetic forenoons because of wrong breakfast eating.

To feel right, you must have a well-balanced, complete breakfast ration. At most other meals—lunch and dinner—you get it. But breakfast is a hurried meal, often badly chosen.

Thus Quaker Oats, containing 16% protein, food's great tissue builder, 58% carbohydrate, its great energy element, plus all-important vitamines and the "bulk" that makes laxatives seldom needed, is the dietetic urge of the world today.

It is food that "stands by" you through the morning. Food that should start every breakfast in your home.

Quick Quaker cooks in 3 to 5 minutes. That's faster than plain toast. Don't deny yourself the natural stimulation this rich food offers.

BARTLETT PEAR IS NOW THE STANDARD

The Bartlett was a good Christian pear before it came to America. In fact, that was its original name, but in France, however, "Bon Chretien." The Bartlett pear is now the standard of peardom, the universally used fruit for eating out of hand, but especially fine for culinary purposes and used from a market standpoint almost to the exclusion of other varieties. California is a great producing center, and runs for the world its supply of Bartletts, found in every big hotel around the globe.

The Bartlett, or, as it was then known, the "Bon Chretien," girdled the United States much as they now lay transcontinental telegraph and telephone cables. It started at each coast and met somewhere in the middle states. The original Bon Chretien pears, originals of the Bartletts, came in with the New England colonists, and now flourish over the eastern states and stretch westward. About the same time the Spanish friars in Mexico were growing Bon Chretien pears, they moved up into California, where they became a popular and staple diet in that wonder of a fruit-growing communities, and moved eastward so that Bartlett pears moved the width of the country.

Further south other pears to some extent supplant the Bartlett, being better adapted to the climate, but for the eastern, western and middle states it is the pear par excellence. It became the parent of other pears which have attained favor, notably the Kieffer, which runs the Bartlett second in popular favor, this pear being originated by a cross between the Bartlett and the sand pear by Peter Kieffer of Pennsylvania.

When the term "pear shaped" is used, it refers to the typical contour of the Bartlett or old Bon Chretien pear, which is more regular in outline and quite different from other types of pear, which are more angular, longer necked, or rounder. The Bartlett is surpassed in flavor for eating out of hand by some other varieties, connoisseurs claim, but for general all-around usefulness it is still the oldest and the most popular.

Wintering Raspberries by Covering the Plant

Raspberries may be laid down in cold climates and kept through severe winters by following the suggestions below: For tender varieties the bushes may be tipped over—roots and all—and covered. Late in the fall dig the earth away six inches deep from under the roots, using a long-handled, round-pointed shovel. Then with a four or six-tined fork push against the plant about a foot above the ground, using the foot against the roots, and lay the entire plant over. Then cover the whole plant with earth or coarse hay or straw. If the variety is tender cover two or three inches deep, using earth mostly. Hardy varieties in severe climates may be protected by throwing a few shovelfuls of earth on top of the canes, thus allowing the snow to fill in amongst the tops. If late spring frosts are likely to occur, do not raise the raspberry plants until late in the spring; otherwise they may be replaced in the former position early in the spring. Some growers bend the canes over and cover with earth and trash without digging, but in any event care should be taken not to crack or split the canes.

Save the Strawberries by Using Straw Mulch

"Wheat straw makes the best mulch for strawberries," declares James G. Moore, horticulturist at the University of Wisconsin. "Oat straw may be used as second preference but wheat straw is more apt to be free from weed seed.

"Ordinarily, it is best to wait until the first freeze before mulching so that the team and wagon do not cut up the bed. If the weather is such that there is no alternate freezing and thawing, the ground may be allowed to freeze several inches deep before mulching. Four inches of loose straw is about the right amount for this climate," concludes Moore.

Time of removing the mulch is determined by whether or not a person wishes an early or late berry crop. If the mulch is removed too soon, there is danger from frost. For a late crop the straw is left on until warm weather, or until the vines begin to grow. Leave as much straw on the vines as possible, advocates Moore, so the plants can get through. Some straw should be left between the rows, too, for a mulch. This aids the picking of the berries.

Wire Tree Protectors

By far the best and cheapest protection against mice and rabbits is the wire screen tree protector. This makes a very durable and yet effective barrier against animals and at the same time it is something very easily adjusted to the tree. The cheapest way of making wire tree protectors is to buy galvanized wire cloth in rolls which are twice as wide as the final height of the protector will be. They can be rolled around round rods to give them a spring.

CHAPTER VIII—Continued

And we rowed back to the James ingloriously in the dusk, the shouts of the Walrus' cursuers echoing to us from the shore.

The watch aboard the Royal James challenged us as we made fast by the larboard side-ladder, and when we climbed over the bulwarks to the deck Master Martin flashed a lanthorn in our faces with a gust of oaths in his absurdly gentle tones.

"By the —— ——, but I hoped 'twas that —— —— Flint come a-seekin' mischief," he complained.

"Where is Captain Murray?" I answered.

"In his cabin."

And in the same mild manner he continued to his men:

"To your stations. Remember cap'n's orders. Now these two are aboard, ye'll fire at any boat that approaches and challenge afterward."

The negro lackeys stood aside as we came to the cabin entrance under the poop; the door was open. Down the dark tunnel of the companionway with its stateroom doors on either hand Peter and I could see my great-uncle sitting at the table in the main cabin, a glass of wine at his elbow, a chart spread out before him.

I recounted briefly our conversation with Flint and the determination Peter and I had reached in consequence. He nodded agreement with it.

"You did quite right, Robert. Peter did not exaggerate the dangers inherent in the situation."

"You will excuse me," he went on, "if I return to my studies. I have much upon my mind."

We bade him good night and went to our staterooms, weary enough from the unwonted exercise of rowing. As I shut my door I noted that he was measuring distances in the Caribbean with calipers, and jotting figures upon the margin of the chart.

In the morning all hands were occupied with the task of careening the ship. 'Twas when the work was proceeding satisfactorily that my great-uncle bade Martin tell off a dozen hands who were good shots and call away the longboat.

"I marvel that you dare to leave the James in this defenseless condition," I said to him as the longboat pulled off up the anchorage past the silent bulk of the Walrus.

"There need not necessarily be danger this afternoon," he said. "'Tis all quiet ashore, and I doubt if there is a man sufficiently sober aboard the Walrus to carry a carton of powder from the magazine."

"But by evening they'll ha' slept it off," I insisted.

"True, and with it their lust for bloodshed—for the time being, at any rate. Our problem then will be to turn Flint's mind to some undertaking which will divert his attention and occupy him until we need no longer be concerned for his whimsies."

We landed south of the first river, below where Flint's party had held their carouse, and proceeded inland through a wooded valley, with hills rising to right and left of us and the Spyglass towering in the distance. The day was very clear, and the mountain's summit was a gray cone against the blue of the sky. Even our sullen, hangdog escort of seamen became almost cheery under the influence of their changed surroundings, and with the sight of their first goat they began to whoop and shout like schoolboys. Murray, despite his age, was as spry as the youngest of us, and he never wasted a shot.

We had maintained a brisk pace on our wanderings, and we reached the site of the spring well before sunset. My great-uncle surveyed the situation with a calculating eye, estimated the stand of timber on the hill's sides, and exclaimed that there was no neighboring eminence whence an enemy could command it.

"'Tis all you have asserted it to be," he said. "Moreover, it gives me an idea of a way in which we may occupy the energies of Captain Flint and his lambs for the ensuing weeks of our stay."

A thread of smoke trickled up beside the mouth of the rivulet in the wood along the estuary, and I indicated it to him.

"There is Flint," I said.

"Yes," he replied absently, and kept on.

The shadows were lengthening as we stepped out of the forest into a glade on the river's bank. Several additional fires had been kindled, and around each were huddled groups of pirates much the worse for the last night's drinking-bout. John Silver was the only man who appeared to have any animation left in him. 'Twas he first saw us, and evidently spoke to Flint, who sat with Bones and several other cronies at the smallest of the fires. He swung toward us as Flint rose unsteadily and tacked in his wake.

"There is Flint," I Said.

"Come a-visitin', captain?" Silver inquired cheerfully. "Mighty kind o' ye, sir, seein' as how most o' our lads is a bit the worse for liquor and blood-lettin'. My duty to ye, Master Ormerod. I hopes I sees you and your friend well?"

"Blood-lettin?" repeated Murray, ignoring the balance of his remarks. "The old story, eh? Well, well! You'll never learn. How many for the sailmaker's palm and needle?"

"Three, captain. And main lucky we are as—"

Flint lurched up beside him.

"Stow that, John," growled his captain. "I'll do the talkin'. What's your trouble, Murray?"

My great-uncle took a pinch of snuff with his inimitable knack of expressing acute disgust without moving a muscle of his face.

"I have been a-hunting," he replied. "Shooting for the pot. We stopped on the way to our boat to pass the time o' day with you, Flint."

Flint snorted.

"Time o' day! H—l! 'Tain't like you to take the trouble."

"I am a person of most uncertain proclivities," replied my great-uncle. "I hear from Silver that last night's episode was accompanied by the usual fatalities."

"Three," assented Flint. "Two o' 'em could be spared—lousy dogs. The other was Toby Welsh, as stout a fellow as we had."

"Not bad for one night's work," commented Murray.

Flint was obviously in no very belligerent mood; he could scarce stand. But he flamed up at this.

"Aye, and what d'ye expect? How many months did ye tell me I must hide here wi' a crew that knows naught but how to brew the devil's broth? And how many men d'ye think will be alive by the end of the time? Gut me, but 'twill be like the song we sing o' the Dead Man's Chest!"

"I fear it will," agreed my great-uncle. "Unless you take measures to prevent it."

"Measures? There's a deal to be done in keeping twelvescore men from fighting on this chunk o' earth and rock!"

"There's your ship to be cleaned," said my great-uncle tentatively.

"I'd ha' mutiny on my hands did I call for it! They're all for a run ashore, and there'll be no working them aboard ship until they ha' had their fill o' woods and mountains."

"Ah!" said my great-uncle. "Doubtless that is so. Well, if they must remain ashore a time, is it not in their own interest to erect themselves some shelter from the elements? We have often said that some day we should build ourselves a fort on the island."

"We ha'."

"I came upon the ideal spot this afternoon—a sand hillock overgrown with fine pines and oaks eastward of the swamps. It hath the airs from the ocean, a good prospect of the anchorage and the nearer waters, and there is a spring at the very top."

"And I'm to do the work?" snarled Flint.

"Your men are to do the work," corrected Murray. "I should gladly assist them in it but for the fact that my own crew will be occupied aboard-ship during the duration of our stay. We of the Royal James, I may point out, are laboring in the common interest no less than your people will be if they undertake the construction of the fort."

"Blast me for a —— —— fool if I care two —— —— —— for the common interest!" cried Flint. "But 'tis true there is need of the fort, and if the men will bide ashore they should ha' a roof to their heads and a better place to camp than down here in the river vapors. I'll see what's to be done, Murray."

"You'll not regret it," replied my great-uncle. "I shall be glad to lend you aught I possess in the way of tools or advice."

The building of the hilltop fort appealed to some boyish strain submerged beneath the surface villainy of Flint's scoundrels. They went to their task with positive enthusiasm, clearing the hillock of timber, sawing and squaring the logs and erecting a substantial house of the more massive logs and after that an open stockade or piling of sapling stakes six feet high.

Murray's personal object was already accomplished. The Royal James was back upon an even keel, her bottom scraped clean, her hull fresh-painted inside and out, her rigging overhauled and canvas in order, spars tested and a weak topmast replaced, guns varnished, stores checked and stowed, sufficient great-cartridge for three actions prepared by the gunner, ballast aboard and distributed with a careful eye for sailing trim.

"As sweet and proper as though she was just from the hands of the dockyard fitters at Portsmouth," was Murray's comment on on evening about the beginning of August. "The tide ebbs on the break of dawn. I purpose sailing then."

"And you must deliver the body of your hostage beforehand," I answered as disagreeably as I could.

"Even so," he acknowledged. "'Tis regrettable, Robert, yet the thing will come, I venture to predict, when you will look back with pride upon the inconvenience you suffered."

"I'll accept the inconvenience if I may escape the rascals alive," I retorted.

"Of that you need have no doubts," he said earnestly. "I shall accompany you, and you may hear my parting instructions to Flint. Friend Peter, will you indulge me for the space of half an hour whilst I visit the Walrus with my nephew?"

"Neen," answered Peter, and pushed away from the table. "I go too."

"No, no—"

"I go too."

"But naught was said of two hostages—"

"If Bob goes, I go," insisted the Dutchman. "Ja."

Murray shook his head.

"For you I might not be responsible, Peter."

"I will be responsible for myself," said Peter. "I go to der Walrus or you go oudt der window."

My great-uncle stared at him for a moment, then burst into laughter.

"By gad, you would! And after, become captain in my place, no doubt. You are unmitchable, Peter. What do you say, nephew?"

"I'd not have Peter risk his throat with mine," I answered uncomfortably."

"I go wit' you, Bob," repeated the Dutchman.

"You see!" cried Murray. "'Tis useless to object. Go with you he will. Well, you'll have company at least—and I shall lack a companion whose presence is not the less valuable for his silence. A good friend is Peter, Robert. A would he were mine!"

Peter rose.

"Wa go," he said. "Ja."

On deck Murray had the longboat called away, and we embarked in silence. 'Twas a hot night, with very little air stirring, and the ribald uproar on the Walrus was amazingly distinct. The James was like a tomb by contrast. Not a sound came from her, and the only lights she showed were in the waist and the main cabin. The Walrus was a blaze of lanthorns from poop to fo'csle, but Murray hailed the deck twice before he had an answer.

"Boat ahoy!" responded a husky voice then. "Why'n —— don't ye come aboard?"

"'Tis Captain Murray to see Captain Flint," replied my great-uncle calmly.

"Aye, aye, sir," answered the husky voice on a quaver of fear. "We'll call him directly. Will ya coma nboard, sir?"

My great-uncle turned to Peter with one foot on the side ladder.

"Are you certain you must go with Robert?" he asked. "I can assure you no harm shall come to him."

"Ja, I go."

My great-uncle's reply was a shrug of indifference, and Peter and I climbed after him to the deck. The Walrus was a revelation after the ordered discipline of the Royal James. In a word, she was pig-dirty. Her deck was littered with all kinds of rubbish; her rigging was slack and spliced in a fashion which seemed inhberly to me, who was a jnbber; her canvas was torn, poorly patched and wretchedly furled; boats, barrels, lumber, spare spars and cables lay about in entire confusion. The planks we trod on were slippery with grease. The paint was peeling from the bulwarks. There were spots of rust on the muzzle of a chase gun, which itself was hauled out of its proper position.

Flint came swaggering down to us from the poop in a condition which was in harmony with his surroundings. Like most of his men, he had discarded coat, shirt, stockings and shoes to accommodate himself to the heat of a tropical summer. His loose canvas trousers, identical with those the seamen wore, were streaked with tarcreams were covered with dried blood where they had been scratched by brambles in his shore expeditions; out of the matted hair on his chest was thrust the head of a tiger, most marvelously tatooed in black and yellow. His hair was a link frame for his saturnine face, stubbly with a week's growth of beard.

"What d'ye seek, Murray?" he growled. "Come to look us over?"

"I am come to fulfill my contract with you," replied my great-uncle. "I am sailing with the morning ebb, and I bring you, not one hostage, but two."

Flint stepped closer and scrutinized Peter and me.

"Two, eh?" What do I want wi' two?" What good's this fat man to me? He means nothing to you."

"On the contrary," denied my relative. "Master Corbier is an old and valued enemy of mine, of whom I have hopes of making in time a friend."

"Well, he's no good to me; gut me if he is!"

"You will take both or none," said my great-uncle in the voice like a dripping icicle which he knew so well how to assume.

"Nasty, are ye?" rasped Flint. "Blast ye for a—"

A light in Murray's tawny eyes kindled like a flame under the reflection of the battle-lanthorns which were hung from the lower spars.

"Two it is," Flint ended hastily. "But ye'll never see either one o' 'em if ye don't make good on your bargain. I ha' supported much from ye, Murray, but—"

"You'll support more for sufficient gold," rebuked my great-uncle. "Tut, man, I read you like a book. When we first encountered you were proud to be mate of a trading brig. I have put you in the way to rank and fortune, if you know how to exploit your opportunities. Hark ye!"

"You said seven hundred thousand," snapped Flint.

"I said seven hundred thousand to be divided betwixt the two ships."

A shrewd look dawned in Flint's face.

"And where are ye a-goin' to pluck this million and a half o' treasure from?" he demanded. "You ha' said much of it, but you told me little. What course doth the treasure ship sail? Where do you lurk for her? There's wide seas betwixt the Main and the Atlantic, and ye can't stop every hole, Murray."

"You may safely entrust that portion of the task to me," replied my great-uncle dryly.

Are You a Courier subscriber? If not, Why not

Who Pays?

You who believe advertising is too expensive to justify its returns, listen to this:

Twenty-eight years ago the makers of a watch produced a cumbersome but accurate article, priced $1.50. Without advertising, they sold that first year 12,000. The next year, with a little tentative advertising, they sold 87,000. Encouraged, they increased the factory and distribution, reduced the size of the watch, priced it $1.00, made a reasonable advertising appropriation—and sold 485,000.

When the makers of a famous camera began advertising thirty years ago, they made one camera which took a 2 1-2 inch picture, and sold at $25.00. In 1917, that time of the distressing upward trend of prices, these people made a better camera that sold for $10.00.

Who pays for the advertising? Or does the advertising pay for itself?

And what good advertising executed in attractive print did for the watch and the camera, it can do in some measure for your product.

Let us talk with you about the printing of your sales literature.

DEATH CAUSED BY FALL FROM HAY MOW

Frank Harvey Never Regained Consciousness After Accident

Frank Harvey, aged 61, a resident of this vieinity for many years, died at his home on the Waller farm last Monday night at about midnight, from the result of injuries received in a fall from a hny mow.

Mr. Harvey was working in the barn at the time of the necident, throwing down baled hay to feed the cows. No one was present at the time and just how the accident happened is not definitely knnwn, but it is thought that the hook he was using to move the hay slipped from a bale, causing him to fall backwards through n hole in the floor leading down to the floor below. He struck his head on the edge of the hole as he fell, rendering him unconseious from which condition he never rnllied, death coming about 7 hours later.

Deceased was born in Shainsville, Ohio, May 15, 1865, being one of a family of six children. He was married to Rachel Cotterman, August 25, 1888. To this union were born seven children. Those left to mourn their loss are the widow and five children, three daughters, Mrs. Everett Crane of Charlevoix, Mrs. Harry Phillips of Boyne City and Mrs. Otto West of Traverse City; two sons, Edgar Harvey of Grand Rapids and Walter Harvey of Charlevoix; also one brother and one sister, besides numerous other relatives and friends.

Funernl services will be held Thursday morning at 10 o'clock, from the home on Waller's farm, Rev. Hermsn Burns of the Bnptist ehureh offieiating. The body will be plaeed in n vault until later when it will be buried in Undine cemetery.

TRAVERSE FUND GOES OVER BIG

Eight Thousand Dollars Subscribed to Boost Summer Activities

The campaign for the community service and activities fund for resort boosting purposes at Traverse City has resulted in a total of $8,000 having been raised instead of the $6,000 sought.

The Kiwanis club, which raised $4,061, won the competition with the Rotary club, which obtained $3,944, and the Rotary club will give $25 to the fund as its forfeit.

The fund assures music during the summer, a wide distribution of local advertising and an adequate supply of printed matter by a committee of which Dr. E. L. Thrilby is chairman.

The Blessing of the Blossoms probably will get enough frnm the fund to finance the annusl pageant and some of the money may be used for pienics for states represented there during the coming season.

IT PAYS TO SPRAY AND PRUNE APPLES

It pays to spray nnd prune all apple trees every year. All weak, dead or diseased limbs should be removed in addition to the ones limt are taken out to give the desired form. Then, the following spray program should be followed: At some time durlng the dormant season either in the fall or early spring apply lime-sulphur, 6 gallons to 50 gallons of water which will test 5 degrees Baume. In the spring just after the leaf buds burst but before the blossoms open spray with 1¾ gallons of lime-sulphur and 1½ pounds of arsenate of lead to 50 gallons of water. If plant lice nre present at this time add ½ pint of nicotine sulphate to each 50 gallons of spray. If continuous cool, damp weather prevails make this application when the first leaves are expanding but before the blossom bud leaves begin to separate. The next four sprays should consist of the same materials as the second spray and should be made according to the following rules: The third spray should be applied just after the petals have fallen but before the calyx lobes have closed. The fourth spray should be given from two to three weeks after petals fall. If blotch is present this spray should be made within at least two weeks after petals fall. If the blotch is very severe use bordeaux mixture 2-4-50 instead of the lime-sulphur and make two additional applications at two-week intervals. The fifth spray should be applied about the second week in July, depending upon the locality and the presence of the codling moth. It is best to consult the county agent about the time of this spray. Bordeaux mixture should also be substituted for this spray if the temperature is extremely high or if bitter rot is present. The last spray should be applied about three or four weeks after fifth spray or about from 10 to 12 weeks after the petals fall. All of these sprays should be applied thoroughly, taking care that the material reaches all parts of the tree and it is important that the spray should be very near the correct strength and put on the trees at the time when it will be most effective.

Benjamin Brown and party, who left last week for Detroit to drive baek new ears,, returned Saturday by train from Manistee, being forced to leave their cars there on aceount of the impassible conditions of the roads.

Frances J. Gallagher is now driving a new Ford truck on the Charlevoix-Petoskey freight haul. His regent purchase is the latest of the Ford products and will, as Franees says, be on the job every minute from now on until snow blockades the roads next winter.

The roads are now open from East Jordan, Boyne City and Petoskey. The rotnry plow from Petoskey arrived here Wednesday noon, as did also the county plow from Boyne City. The county plow proceeded south toward Traverse City where they will meet the plow coming on M-11 from the south.

A couple of colored thugs shot a Detroit street car conduetor through the heart because he refused to turn over his cash box containing ten dollars, and then shot to kill a police officer who attempted to arrest them. And still we balk at capital punishment when such crimes are of almost daily occurrence on Detroit streets.

The body of Joseph Evertt Bassett, brother of Freeman Bassett of this city, was brought here Monday from Newaygo, Michigan, where he passed away Friday, April 2nd. The remains were met at the train by relatives and friends of the family, and were tnken to Brookside cemetery, where funernl services were conducted by Rev. Herman Burns, and the remains laid to rest.

WHEN PA IS SICK

When pa is sick, he's scared to death,
An ma an' us just holds our breath.
He crawls in bed, an' puffs and grunts,
And does all kinds of crazy stunts.
He wants "Doc" Brown. an' mighty quick,
For when pa's sick he's awful sick.

He gasps and groans an' sort o' sighs
He talks so queer an' rolls his eyes.
Ma jumps an' runs an' all of us,
An' nll the house is in a fuss.
An' peace and joy ls mighty skeerce—
When pa is sick, it's something fierce

When Ma is Sick

When ma is sick she pegs away;
She's quiet, though; not much to say;
She goes right on a-doin' things,
An' sometimes laughs, or even sings.
She says she don't feel extra well,

But then it's just a kind o' spell.
She'll be all right tomorrow, sure,
A good old sleep will be the cure.
An' pa he sniffs an' makes no kick,
For women folk is always sick.
An' ma, she smiles let's on she's glad
When ma is sick it ain't so bad.

QUESTION OF WET OR DRY

The states that tried permitting the sale of beer and wine, while prohibiting stronger drinks, rejected this system very quickly. If the majority had wanted beer and wine, they would have kept it. Iowa legalized beer and wine in 1858, after adopting prohibition in 1855. The drunkenness and the law violations which followed made the prohibition laws a farce and Iowa repealed this law because the majority wanted sobriety, not beer and wine.

North Carolina allowed the sale of 2 per cent beer in 1909, but the majority who did not want any sort of beer, elected a legislature which in 1911 forbade all liquors with over 1-10th of 1 per cent of alcohol.

Georgia tried both the dispensary system and the near beer and locker club plan, but repealed them, substituting strict prohibition in response to the popular demand.

Rhode Island legalized beer for a brief period, while forbidding stronger beverages. Crime and drunkenness so incerased, it returned to the license system as preferable.

Indian Territory ond the Territory of Hawaii made the beer experiment, as unsuccessfully ns other portions of the United States. Governor W. R. Farrington, of Hawaii, in a letter to the Nationnl Liberty League, wrote thus of the failure of the beer experiment in that territory:

"The people of Hawaii have had an experience along this line during the days of high license. The claim was set up some years ago that the illicit sale of hard liquors was due to high license and that this phase of law violation could be materially reduced, if not eliminated, by providing for the legal issuance of low-priced license for the sole of light wine and beer.

"A law was enacted along this line with the result that the number of establishments licensed to sell light wine and beer increased considerably throughout the country districts. It was the concensus of opinion that this did not reduce the sale of hard liquors or the violation of the law relating to hard liquors. In many instonces the light wine and beer saloons served merely to promote the sale and consumption of all liquors. In many of the establishments hard liquor could be obtained. The practical demonstration proved the light wine and beer theory to be a complete failure and the law was repealed."

Massachusetts tried the beer experiment. According to the report of the Canadian commissioners sent about (1874 or 1875) to inquire into the workings of the prohibitory law, there were committed to the Suffolk county jnil, Boston, in 1867, under the dry regime, 3,786 persons. In 1870, when beer was legalized but nothing else was, there were 5,262, a difference in favor of prohibition of 1,568.

Hamlett Bates, police justice of Chelsea, said on January 3, 1873: "The sale of beer should not be legalized. Almost every beer saloon is a rum shop."

Justice Newton Morse, of Middlesex county, Massachusetts, said: "I voted in the legislature of 1869-70 for the beer law, as, I believed, in the interest of temperance and the Republicnn party, with the experience of the last two years I shall this year vote against the beer law in the same interest."

Becnuse of such evidence which could be multiplied, official elections are almost uniformly against beer and wine.

The reasons why straw votes are not represented are clear. The dissntisfied are eager to express themselves in ony way. Those who approve existing lswa or conditions do not respond to straw vote appeals. To safeguard the voting in a straw bollot, costly and elaborate machinery is necessary. This seldom exists, hence the unscrupulous can repeat as often as they care to obtain the newspaper bollots. Non-voters have the same voting privilegea as citizens. In the Literary Digest poll 55 per cent of tha beer nnd wine vote and 62 per cent of votes for repeal camo from 12 states which contain 72 per cent of the foreign-born population of the United States, although those states had a minority of the population of the ration. Prohibition, as President Coolidge has said, is an "Americsn policy of government." The un-Americanized cannot understand it, oppose it and furnish a high percentage of the bootleggers who violate it.

There is no dignity about free-born American citizens casting his straw vote for policies which never can belong to the check mark made on a newspaper coupon. Hence the small vote in such tests. In the 1922 Literary Digest poll, 796,257 votes were cast. In the 1924 presidential election, 20,022,261 votes were cast. The total number of those who participated in the straw vote were an inconsiderable froction of the citizens and not representative of the nation at large.

There is only one legal method for those who wish beer and wine to obtain those beverages They can go to the polls and elect a congress which will propose either to repeal or amend the Eighteenth Amendment. They can elect legislatures in three-fourths of the states which will ratify such repeal or chnnge. No newspaper poll will accomplish this. Not even the vote of a majority of congress can make the sale of beer and wine legal so long as the Eighteenth Amendment is in the constitution. Nor would the repeal of the Volstead Act permit the salo of beer in 39 states whose state laws prohibit such beer. The very utmost that any congress could do, even if the wets were sufficiently numerous to elect a majority who were thus unfaithful to their oaths of office, would be to remove the penalties imposed for the manufacture, sale, etc., of beer and wine. That would be blatant nullification. It is hardly probabla that a congress could be elected which would be guilty of such disrespect for our fundamental law.

The supporters of prohibition are too busy in constructively supporting the enforcement of prohibition, to engage in futile balloting on this subject. The American people havo signified their desire for on enforced law. There is discontent with needless weokness in enforcement in New York, and Maryland, and some other places. Thot discontent desires more, not less, prohibition. It wants efficiency and honesty in the enforcement work.

The American people have never retraced their stops where a moral question was involved. Prohibition ia primarily a moral question. Even its economic, social and hygienic benefits are lesa significant than the moral phase of the problem. About the only argument the foes of prohibition have offered is deflance to law. None arise to defend drinking. The hideous record of the liquor traffic throughout the history of the world has brandcd it too deeply for the most eloquent apologist today to attempt do more than urge temperate drinking as a substitute for intemperate.

In Paris, the capltal of the land of the vineyard, wine has not decreased drunkenness nor promoted temperance. The ratio of arrests for drunkenness there are two and a half times as high as in New York City. Several hundred thousand home stills testify to the failure of the most liberal law reduce alcoholic consumption.

Beer has equally failed as a temperance beversge. Barvaria is one of the world's beer centers. According to Prof. Dr. Emil Kraepelin, of the famous Munich clinic, alcoholism and delirum tremens dropped from 2,589 in 1910-13, with standard beer, to 476 in 1915-18, with the 5-6ths reduction in beer consumption, as a war measure to conserve food material. With the increased alcoholic content and increased beer consumption after the war, these returned to their former ratios. Crime, inssnity and other drink-csused evils dropped with the lowered alcoholic contend of beer and the decressed consumption, and increased when these were removed. Beer promotes misery, crime, insanity. It is no more a temperance drink than other liquors, in spite of the arguments of the brewery press agents. There is as much alcohol in one schooner of 4 per cent beer as in the ordinary small glass of whiskey. There is only 1-12th the percentage of alcoholic content in the beer but there is 12 times the volume. The amount of alcohol consumed in beer before prohibition wns a little more than that consumed in whiskey and other distilled spirits.

The present violations of the law arise from the habits created by yesrs of licensed liquor. The way to cure those habits and reduce the violations is not to legalize alcohol in beer and wine but to stamp out the lawless traffic. The majority know this and will not support in any legal vote the return of beer and wine.

Friday and Saturday, 25 per cent discount on all beads, also many stamped goods, at the Holley Gift Shop.—Adv. 11t3.

Heroic Roman Matron

Cecona, wife of Caligula, emperor of Rome, was killed by Julius Lupus, A. D. 41, while weeping over the body of her murdered husband. When she saw the assassin approaching and discovered his purpose she calmly presented her breast to the sword, urging him to finish the tragedy his companions had begun. Her two daughters died by the same hand.—Chicago Journal.

Alloys Long Used

An alloy has been used with gold for many centuries. Gold in the raw state was known in the latter Stone age. It was probably the first metal known to man. So long ago as in the day of the cities of Cyzicus and Phocaea electrum, a natural alloy of gold and silver, was used in making coins.

His Wealth of Learning

Willie was just back from the circus. He bounded into the room with a hop, skip and a jump. "It was great!" he cried. "But what did you learn?" asked his grandmother. "What did I learn?" he echoed. "Just let me tell you. I learned to eat peanuts with both hands. That's what I learned!"

He offered me his hand, and somewhat to my own surprise I found myself inclined to accept it.

"Robert," he said, "I regret exceedingly the necessity I am under of inflicting this unpleasantness upon you. I shall endeavor to provide you adequate reparation. You also, friend Peter. Remember, we are working for a greater cause than our personal enrichment."

He vaulted lightly to the top of the bulwarks and dropped out of sight on the farther side.

"But me, but there's times I think he believes all he says," swore Flint.

CHAPTER IX

Peter Plays at Bowls with Destiny

Darby McGraw's red head shone in the lanthorn light.

"Whisht, but it's Master Bob again! Now ain't this the mighty forchune to have ye with us! Ha' ye left the old devil you for good?"

He nodded his torch of hair at the vague hull of the James. Flint exploded with raucous laughter.

"'The old devil you,'" he repeated. "—— me, but it takes Darby to put the right word to a man. 'Tis what he is, blast him for the —— —— —— he sets himself up to be!"

Darby proffered him a huge silver beaker of rum.

"I fetched this from the cabin after ye, captain," said the Irish boy in his wheedling brogue. "Troth, say I to meself, if the captain must talk with Murray he'll ha' a bad taste in the mouth o' him to be washed out, and I'd best ha' a sup o' sugar-juice handy for his needin's."

Flint seized the rum, threw back his head and drained the fiery stuff as if it had been wine.

"You said right, my lad," he answered sourly. "And I'm thinking I'll maybe need all the luck that red head o' yours can bring me. Where's Billy Bones?"

"Dhrunk under the cabin table," returned Darby promptly.

"Gut him for the souse he is! And Long John?"

"Sure, captain dear, 'twas yourself sent him ashore to keep the lads up to the fort from carvin' theirselves."

"So I did. Well, I'll see to the prisoners myself then."

"Pris'ners!" protested Darby, wide-eyed. "Och, captain, ye won't be hard on Master Bob! He's as kindly a young gentleman as ever I see—and Peter there is a grand fightin' fellur. Ye should hear to tales they tell o' his murtherin' and slayin' with the red injuns."

"I'll be as hard as they make me be," returned Flint. "But for tonight I must have them safe."

VALET AutoStrop Razor sharpens itself

Peter, at my elbow, spoke for the first time.

"Ja, ja." We go. I have a wish to sleep."

"Sleep, is it?" jeered Flint. "That ye shall, my hearty! Come along o' me."

He led us aft, the others following, Darby in the rear almost in tears. At the end of a dark passage Flint unhooked a lanthorn from a wall and one of his men heaved up a trapdoor

"Are You Planning to Pry That Off With Your Finger Nails?" I Taunted.

Below was a pool of shadows that scuttled and swayed as if to escape the feeble light. There was an odor, also, none too pleasant.

I drew back.

"Certes, you could lodge us securely otherwhere than this," I protested.

"No, no," answered Flint. "There's not a door aboard hath a lock would hold. Darby, let alone you two. I'm sorry for ye, lad, if it's no fault o' yours that you're here; but for tonight at least you must lie in the lazaret. Here, ye shall ha' the lanthorn to keep the rats off, and in the morning we'll manage different."

Peter pushed past me, and took the lanthorn from his hand.

"We go, Ja," he squeaked. "Come, Bob."

I followed him without another word, already wondering at his extraordinary docility. A hasp clacked home in a bolt, and footsteps thudded away. I sat on the bottommost step of the ladder and peered hopelessly around me as Peter, swinging the lanthorn as high as the low deckroom allowed, prowled around the limited area of our prison.

A black rat as large as a cat rushed across my feet. Squeaks and rustlings sounded in the corners.

Peter returned to the ladder-foot, deposited the lanthorn on the floor and plumped himself beside it.

"What you t'ink, Bob?" he said blandly. "Do we stay or get oudt?"

I frowned at him.

"'Tis no joke," I snapped. "I had reasons for—"

"Ja," he agreed. "Her little gal."

"How did you know?" I exclaimed.

"I know," he replied with his slumpering imitation of a laugh. "You t'ink der little gal is a good gal. You t'ink it is not goodt dot she be taken aboard der James. You want to be there andt be sure dot she is safe."

"'Tis true as gospel, Peter," I groaned. "I hoped to the last this ridiculous plan of Murray's would fall through in some manner, but the man has a damnable determination."

"Ja," agreed Peter. "I t'ink he takes der treasure ship, Bob. Dot's easy."

"Easy? I see not how!"

"Ja, it is easy to take her. But after comes his troubles. Much treasure is bad for pirates. We have troubles after. Suppose we get oudt tonight. Suppose we get oudt and back to der James. Ja?"

I looked around me skeptically at the heavy planking and stout timbers of the sides and for'ard bulkhead.

"It can't be done. 'Twould take a week to break out of this—and the James will be sailing in five or six hours."

"Neen," said Peter. "We get oudt—any time, we get oudt."

"How?" I demanded.

He picked up the lanthorn and led me for'ard to the bulkhead. The light showed that one of the oaken planks was slightly sprung, leaving an infinitesimal crack between its edge and the uppermost of its fellows.

"Are you planning to pry that off with your finger-nails?" I taunted him.

"Neen," he answered, and conducted me to a corner whence the rats scudded as we approached.

He stirred his foot amongst some rubbish and turned up several long, wrought-iron spikes, such as are used to bolt together the heavier ship-timbers.

"Dot's plenty," he said.

I could hardly control the gush of relief that welled up in me.

"I believe it is," I whispered. "But oh, Peter, there is such little time!"

"Enough," he grunted. "Come! We begin."

We listened at the bulkhead for signs of life on the opposite side, but not a sound came through to us, although the clamor on the upper deck and in the poop cabin seeped into our dungeon from overhead. 'Twas stiflingly hot, and Peter's first care was to strip off his buckskin shirt and leggings.

"We got to swim," he said, eyeing them regretfully. "You don't need clothes tonight, Bob."

So I followed his example, and we fell to work with our spikes upon the sprung plank, the sweat pouring in rills of moisture from our half-naked bodies, our crude tools slipping in our greasy fingers as we pried and pushed and fought for every inch of space betwixt the plank and the upright it was nailed to. Peter did all the work.

As the last nail yielded to Peter's shoulder the thin clangor of the bell of the Royal James stole down to us out of the night. Four times it rang—two o'clock!

"Ger oudt, Bob," whispered Peter.

I wriggled through the gap in the bulkhead, and he passed the lanthorn after me. Its flame was burning low, but I had sufficient light to determine that I stood in a stores-hold crammed with casks of rum, salt meat and ship's biscuit. A door in its for'ard bulkhead led to another hold of the orlop deck, where were a hatch and ladder leading up to the gundeck. I crept as far as the foot of the ladder and listened to the snores of the scores of men who slept in hammocks slung between the great guns of the battery. That way lay our only path of escape.

I returned to Peter in a mood that was none too cheerful; but he was already at work with his spike, hissing like a kettle on the boil as he prodded away with its blunted point. I was able to be of more assistance to him this time, since from the farther side 'twas possible to exert a greater leverage, once the plank was sprung loose. Yet the James sounded seven bells before we were successful. Peter grunted his satisfaction.

"We got time," he said. "Whoof! So much I sweat I slide me t'rough dot hole."

He was stripped to the buff, and his pink, hairless body was all a-glisten as he rolled into the opening. His head and shoulders made it easily, but I saw with dismay that his immense paunch was an insurmountable obstacle. He heaved and shoved and twisted. 'Twas no manner of use.

Peter backed out of his predicament to an accompaniment of squeaking grunts, and I followed him, too bitterly disappointed for words. Escape had seemed so easy—and now we were condemned to two months aboard the Walrus, very likely to exceedingly uncomfortable deaths, for I fancied that Flint was the sort of man to lose his queer mixture of fear and respect for my great-uncle as soon as they were out of touch.

"Hold der light here, Bob," said Peter, squatting on the litter on the deck, and he proceeded to extract a splinter from his foot.

"Ja, dot's goodt," he went on, standing up. "Well, we don't get oudt dot way."

He felt his way toward the ladder to the cabin-hatch.

"Always there is another way, Bob. If one way is not goodt, der other maybe is better. Ja! You see."

He climbed the ladder silently in his bare feet until his great shoulders were directly beneath the square of the hatch, and I heard a faint grinding of straining metal, the crackling of tortured wood.

"Ja," he panted, desisting. "We do dot. Now you be ready, Bob. Jump nop, quick. Maybe we got to kill some fellers, andt if we do we don't let them holler."

I could feel his legs quivering above me; the ladder itself vibrated under us. There was a whine, a sudden pop—and the hatch flew up in the air. Peter caught it on the flats of his hands before it could settle again and lifted it back. He was out in a flash, and I was hard on his heels.

We crouched on the main-cabin floor, staring about us for a sign of the pirates. The lights had all burned out, and it was several minutes before our eyes became adjusted to the starshine that sifted through the stern window.

At the exit to the deck we halted to reconnoiter our situation, and 'twas lucky we did so. Eight bells rang out from the Royal James, and a voice most astonishingly close muttered a curse.

"Ye might think they 'ad a blarsted admiral aboard," answered a second voice.

A whistle shrilled, and the gruff voice of Saunders reached us quite distinctly ordering the topmen aloft.

"There they go, Jemmy," returned the second man. "We'll be free o' the swabs in another glass."

"And good riddance, says I," declared Jemmy, spitting into the scuppers.

I saw where they were then, leaning against the starboard poop-ladder and peering overside at the vague hull of the James. Peter's little eyes had identified them, too, and his fingers sank into the flesh of my arm, signaling me to stay where I was. He glided past me on to the deck, his body ghostly in the gloom.

"I'm —— if I can see as why we has to keep our peepers open," growled the second man.

"'Taint long now till morning," replied Jemmy. "What d'ye s'y to a dash o' rum, matey?"

He half-turned, and saw Peter's enormous white bulk hovering over him, and his teeth gleamed as he opened his mouth involuntarily to scream.

"I don't care if—" the second man said.

The Dutchman leaped, and his two arms whipped out. Jemmy's scream died in a guttural cough. He held the throat of each. He held them poised for a moment, then brought their heads together with an odd hollow smack like the cracking of egg-shells. They collapsed inert on the deck.

I darted for the rail, but Peter stayed me.

"Neen, neen," he objected. First I get me some pants, Bob. Andt we drop these fellers overboardt."

He was divesting the larger of the two of the single garment each one wore while he talked, and, conquering an instinctive sensation of repugnance, I did likewise.

"Dot's better, Ja," remarked Peter complacently. "A little tight; but I don't like to be naked, Bob. Neen!"

He rose to his feet, buckling the dead man's belt around him.

"They'll splash!" I warned him as he picked up the big one.

"Nobody hears," he answered.

He lowered the body over the rail feet first, and the splash was less than I had expected. The second body followed with equal expedition, and Peter laid hold of one of several ropes that trailed untidily over the Walrus' side.

Safe from Dry-Rot

is a happy trait of Native Hemlock that gives stability insurance for your buildings down through the years.

To this add these other essential advantages not possessed by any other structural lumber in equal combination:

1—Oversize studding, rafters and joists—8% to 16⅔% more wood to piece—greater structural strength.
2—Contains no pitch—Northern Hemlock lath won't stain plaster and are more fire resistant.
3—Holds nails like a vise — keeps your structure rigid against wind strain and climatic rigors.
4—Easy to work—speeds up construction and lowers building costs. Carpenters like it.
5—Takes paints and stains perfectly.
6—And—it's Grade-marked with Licensed Association Brand and Grade stamped on each piece by the manufacturer, insuring uniform quality and guaranteed grades.

Then you will appreciate the big investment value in buildings constructed of genuine Northern Hemlock.

Ask your lumberman to show you samples of Grade-marked Northern Hemlock. Or write us for booklet chock-full of helpful suggestions on building.

CROWDED TO ITS CAPACITY

EASTER CONGREGATION FILLS M. E. CHURCH

Choruses, Solos and Instrumental Parts Well Rendered By Local Musicians

Probably one of the largest congregations that ever filled the Methodist Episcopal church crowded it to the limit of its seating capacity last Sunday afternoon for the Easter Vesper service. It was a service of sermon, instramental music and sacred songs. Features of the service were, an instrumental trio, "The Ninety First Psalm" arranged by Jas. G. MacDermid for violin, saxaphone and piano, a sermon, "somethings new under Sun," based upon the new experiences of Mr. and Mrs. Cleopas and their Sunday afternoon journey from Jerusalem to Emmaus.

The pastor quoted the ancient wise man who wrote "There is nothing new under the Sun," and said, this is generally true, but specifically it does not obtain in every case. Each person lives his own particular life, and the experience s through which he passes are entirely his own and new to him when they first arrive. These two disciples, whose "Hearts burned within them," were having just such new experiences. Among those that came to them were, n new vision, a new sympathy, a new energy, and a new eloquence. The aim of the sermon was to show the application of this old lesson of new Christian experiences to the lives of modern homes and individuals.

The sermon closed with the assertion that the facts of the first Easter day were filling the world with gladness and song. This served as an introduction to the final special feature of the afternoon, which was an Easter Cantata, "The Crucified." The nine parts of the Cantata were as follows:

1. The upper room where the Lord's Supper was institated.
2. Baritone solo and chorus of women's voices, Assurance.
3. Baritone solo, Benediction.
4. Chorus, Gethsemane.
5. Chorus for men's voices, Betrayal.
6. Alto solo, Judgment.
7. Chorus, Calvary.
8. Soprano solo and chorus, Resarrection.
9. Chorus, Lives again our King.

The choruses, solos and instramentnl parts were all well rendered by local musicians, and reflected great credit to all who participated The cantanta was a fitting close to what was considered hy all "a beautiful day in the church."

ELLSWORTH COUPLE WED LAST SATURDAY

Ceremony Performed in First M. E. Church, Grand Rapids

The wedding of Miss Gardena Steenhagen and John R. Wieland of Ellsworth, Mich., took place last Saturday evening, April 3, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Hills, 701 Prospect Ave., S. E. Grand Rapids, Mich. The ceremony was performed before a bank of Easter lilies, ferns and palms. Rev. Sidney J. Francis of First M. E. church read the marriage service.

The bride's gown was of embroidered white canton crepe, her veil being held in place by a wreath of orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of sweetheart roses and swansonia. Miss Jentena Steenhagen, the bride's sister, who attended as bridesmaid, wore a gown of pink georgette and taffeta and carried a bouquet of pink sweetpeas and swansonia. Norman James acted as best man. Mrs. Hills was mistress of ceremonies. The wedding march was played by Miss Catherine Piet.

Only immediate relatives and close friends were present. After April 15, Mr. and Mrs. Wieland will be at home at Ellsworth.

PRELIMINARY PLANS FOR SEWERAGE PLANT

Council Enters Into Contract With Chicago Firm

Initial steps were taken at Tuesday evening's meeting of the council toward correcting present conditions with regards to disposal of city sewage, now emptying into Round Lake and the channel connecting with Lake Michigan.

A contract was entered into with Price, Greeley & Hanson, of Chicago, for preliminary plans for a complete sewage disposal plant, site to be selected at a later date when complete data and survey is made.

The contract is so made that should the plan submitted by the company fail to meet the approval of the state board of health and conservation commission, no charge will be made for the services rendered.

This is the most important problem facing the city today. Sewage dumped into the waters of Round Lake and the channel are a menace to the health of the community. Further, the state board of health has issued a warning to all communities where this condition exists, to immediately divert the sewage from the public waters by erecting sewage disposal plants or the state will do it for them. There is no other solution of the problem other than to build a disposal plant.

The state will not be compelled to force the issue at Charlevoix. We will build a disposal plant, thus eliminating any chance of an epidemic or jeopardizing the health of the thousands of people who spend their summers with us.

AT THE MOVIES

"Lovers in Quarantine"

Speaking of all-star casts—Bebe Daniels has a real Broadway cast of players appearing in her support in her latest starring picture for Paramount, "Lovers in Quarantine," coming to the Palace Theatre on Friday, April 9.

Bebe's reputation as a comedienne will go up several notches as the result of her fine work in this one, an adaptation by Townsend Martin and Luther Reed of the stage hit, "Quarantine," by F. Tennyson Jesse which was one of the outstanding comedy successs last season (1925.)

The story is one of a Bebe as Diana Gordon, a peppy little society miss who is secretly in love with her elder sister's beau, played by Ford. The sister and Ford plan to elope. Diana thinks that Ford really loves her and so decides to take her sister's place. She usurps her stateroom on the boat. It is not until they are three days out to sea that Ford discovers her.

"A Woman of the World"

For the first time in her screen career, Pola Negri plays a serio-comedy role in a modern story with a thoroughly American setting in her latest Paramount starring vehicle, "A Woman of the World," which comes to the Palace Theatre, Tuesday and Wednesday, April 13-14.

The picture is based on Pierre Colling's adaptation of one of Carl Van Vechten's novels, and was produced by Malcolm St. Clair, who has "Are Parents People" and "The Trouble With Wives" to his directorial credit. As usual, Miss Negri is surrounded by a capable supporting cast, the principal members including such talented players as Charles Emmett Mack, Holmes Herbert, Chester Conlin and Blanche Mehaffey.

HOSPITAL NOTES

Joe Schnorra returned to his home last Sunday from the hospital, where he had been receiving medical treatment.

Mrs. Edward Edwards submitted to an operation last Thursday and is getting along nicely at present.

Little Annabell Hiller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Hiller, was operated on last Friday for empyema. She is getting along nicely now.

Master. Elmer Poole, Jr., had a minor operation performed last Saturday and returned to his home the following day.

I. L. Dice was discharged from the hospital Wednesday, after having submitted to two operations in the past few weeks.

Jesse Smith was admitted to the hospital Tuesday for medical treatment. His condition shows improvement.

Cellar Storage for Vegetables

Well Ventilated Basement Is Satisfactory Place if Kept Cool.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A cool, well ventilated, properly insulated cellar under the dwelling or outhouse is a satisfactory place to store vegetables for winter use. Cellars containing a furnace for heating the dwelling are usually too warm and too dry for the storage of root crops. In such cases a portion of the cellar can be partitioned off for storage purposes. Natural earth makes a better floor than concrete or brick, as a certain amount of moisture is desirable. If the cellar is square or rectangular, a storage room can be built in one corner. If it is in the shape of an ell, it is sometimes possible to partition off a storage room with one straight wall. Where more than one wall is constructed, they should be parallel with those of the cellar.

Plan for Storage Room.

Lay 2 by 4-inch scantling flat on the floor and fasten them with pegs driven into the floor or by nailing them to the top of short posts set in the ground. Set 2 by 4-inch studding from this sill to the ceiling, spacing them 16 inches apart from center to center. Locate the door to the storage room at the most convenient point, making it large enough to admit barrels, boxes, etc., a good size being 2½ feet by 6½ feet. Set the studs on either side of the door 32 inches apart, which will allow for the door and the frame. Put a header over the door, allowing 1 inch for the frame and seven-eighths of an inch for the sill at the bottom. Set the studs against the walls where the cellar walls and storage-room walls meet. Care in making the frame square and plumb will enable the builder to get the structure tight with a minimum of labor. A good room is made by covering the studding on the outside with tongue-and-groove material, but a better way is to sheathe the outside with plain lumber, tack building paper on this and side with tongue-and-groove material. This construction in connection with lath and plaster or wallboard on the inside makes an excellent room.

Regulate Temperature.

The temperature of the storage room can be regulated by means of outside windows. At least one window is necessary and two or more are desirable for light and ventilation. Two or more joints of 6-inch stove pipe with a damper and one elbow can be used to bring cool air from the outside to the bottom of the room. The pipe may be fitted into the window by removing one of the lower panes of glass and substituting a board in which has been cut a hole the size of the stovepipe. An outlet for the warm air in the storage room may be provided by removing an upper pane from the window and in its place fitting a small hinged door. This door, when opened, will allow the heated air to escape. Both the damper in the pipe and the hinged door in the window should be closed during cold weather. The windows in storage rooms should be darkened to protect the vegetables from the light.

Movable containers, such as barrels, crates and boxes, are preferable to built-in bins, as the former can be readily moved for cleaning. It is advisable to construct shelves or a flat floor to keep the containers off the ground, to insure a free circulation of air and to prevent the containers from harboring mice, rats, and other vermin. The shelves for canned goods along one side of the room need not be more than six inches wide.

Dairy Specialists Say Pint Not Always Pound

A pint is not a pound the world around, declare dairymen at New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca. Even a pint of water weighs more than a pound, and milk is heavier than water. So that a literal interpretation of the old rule that a pint is a pound might mean the difference between profit and loss to a dairyman selling milk on a narrow margin.

The standard quart of milk of average composition weighs 2.153 pounds, and a 40-quart can of milk weighs 40 times 2.153, or 86.12 pounds.

In some plants where milk is bought by the can and later converted to a weight basis, 2¼ pounds is used as the weight of a quart and a 40-quart can is credited at 85 pounds.

In no case, though, say the dairymen of the college, should anyone take the old adage at its face value, and accept payment for a 40-quart can of milk on the basis of 80 pounds for the full can.

Blanch Vegetables Well

Certain vegetables are highest in quality only if well blanched. Many gardeners neglect this practice, and consequently they market brownish sun-burned heads of cauliflower, green celery, and bitter endive. Blanching should be given careful attention by the home gardener who desires only quality vegetables.

Storage for Potatoes

Store the winter supply of potatoes in caves, cellars, or cool places where the temperatures can be kept below 40 degrees Fahrenheit. The best temperatures are between 34 degrees and 38 degrees, since less loss from shrinkage and dry rot occurs.

Expecting Sudden Wealth

Mr. Henshnwis in Charlevoix. He is a staff correspondent of the Detroit News, sent to find out all about real estate.

WHY?

Because Michigan expects a boom in real estate.

If it comes, the people who have invested in sound real estate will certainly make money; and the outside world certainly thinks it will come.

Charlevoix real estate values will never again be as low as they are now.

Watch Your Breakfast

Energetic Mornings Depend on Breakfast —Start Always with Quaker Oats

HOW you feel all morning depends largely on what you eat for breakfast. Thousands have unenergetic forenoons because of wrong breakfast eating.

To feel right, you must have a well-balanced, complete breakfast ration. At most other meals—lunch and dinner—you get it. But breakfast is a hurried meal, often badly chosen.

Thus Quaker Oats, containing 16% protein, food's great tissue builder; 58% carbohydrate, its great energy element, plus all-important vitamines and the "bulk" that makes laxatives seldom needed, is the dietetic urge of the world today.

It is food that "stands by" you through the morning. Quick Quaker cooks in 3 to 5 minutes. That's faster than plain toast. Don't deny yourself the natural stimulation this rich food offers.

WIDELY KNOWN W. C. T. U. WORKER

Interesting News Received by Mrs. John Jolliffe

Mrs. John Jolliffe of this city has just received a letter from her stepdaughter, Miss Rhena Mosher, who is widely known as a great worker in the interest of the W. C. T. U. for a long time—six or seven years more or less—who was national secretary and lecturer these long years and is widely known through the press, even by some of the ladies of Charlevoix who belong to that organization.

Miss Mosher divided her work, laboring in the southern states in the winter and in northern states in the summer time on account of climatic conditions, so she had a large field of work. She was holding conventions all over this large territory and had varied experiences, some of which were distressing and some very comical and laughable. The thought of a young lady, all alone, paddling her own canoe, a stranger meeting strangers all the time through so many years. Yet her heart was in her work.

There were many varied circumstances which we might mention, but it might take too long, where she held various conventions, one in the city of Milwaukee where they were royally entertained, where they were furnished a beautiful, large building by the city and the mayor and other officials ordered all the saloons and bars closed while the convention lasted. Pretty good for that great beer city. They all appreciate it and the convention was a successful one.

We refer to another instance: She had an invitation to the international convention to be held in Scotland. For some time it was her great desire to hear those European ladies talk, but she had to reply that she could not attend on account of her mother's illness, which later resulted in death.

A little while ago Miss Mosher fell and broke her leg. She has recovered from this injury. She recently married and is now living in Massachusetts, but has not given up her work in connection with the W. C. T. U. and other activities.—Contributed.

EASTER CANTATA WAS RARE TREAT

POSTPONED PROGRAM GIVEN AT CONG. CHURCH SUNDAY

Cantata, "The Liviog Christ," Ably Rendered by Choir of Thirty Voices

An aadience which utilized the entire seating capacity of the First Congregational church enjoyed in reverent quiet, but with deep appreciation, the rendering of the Easter cantata, "The Living Christ," by Wildermere, ander the direction of Mrs. A. J. Stelter, last Sunday afternoon. The chorus and soloists numbered over thirty voices and were sapported by seven instrumentalists.

The program began with an orchestral introduction, followed by the noble processional hymn from Lyra Davidica, "Jesus Christ Is Risen Today, Allelujah," after which the cantata proper occupied the entire program, with the exception of the orchestral number farnished as an offertory during the vocal intermission.

The cantata numbers were arranged as follows:

1. "The Night of Sorrow"—Chorus.
2. "Let Thy Will Be Done"—Contralto solo: Miss Shaw.
3. "Christ Has Risen"—Soprano solo: Mrs. Livingston and chorus.
4. "Lo, I Am With You Always"—Tenor and soprano: Dr. Wilkinson and Mrs. Adams.
5. "The World Is Not Thy Gonl"—Chorus.
6. Orchestra offertory.
7. "Love Is the Grentest of All"—Mrs. Livingston, Miss Shaw and choras.
8. "The Living Christ"—Double quartette: Mrs. Livingston, Mrs. Adams, Miss Shaw, Miss Mitchell, Dr. Wilkinson, Mr. Fowler, Mr. Cale, G. B. Saltonstall.
9. "We Shall Behold Him"—Baritone solo: Mr. Poole.
10. "He Knows His Own"—Women's chorus.
11. "Love Is the Grentest of All"—Duet: Mrs. Livingston and Mrs. Block, and solo, Mrs. Adams with chorus.
12. "We Come to Thee"—Duet and trio: Mrs. Livingston, Mr. Saltonstall and Mr. Ogden.
13. "Hear Us, O Father"—Chorus and finale with soprano obligato, Mrs. Adams and Mrs. Livingston.

The above program is to be repented at the First Presbyterinn church, East Jordan, next Sunday evening, April 18, at 7:30 o'clock.

The East Jordan musicians who shared in the presentation last Sunday were as follows: organist, Mrs. Balch; soprano, Mrs. Wagner; contralto, Miss Shaw; basses, Messrs. Balch, Porter and Seiler; violinist, Miss Chadsey; flutist, Mr. Sanderson.

Instrumentalists, Charlevoix, were: cornet, Mr. Livingston; clarinet, Mr. Wagner; saxophone, Mr. Bellinger, and pianist, Mrs. Swinton.

The Charlevoix singers were: sopranos, Mrs. Adams, Mrs. Livingston, Mrs. Ogden, Mrs. Mitchell, Mrs. McMillan, Mrs. Russell and the Misses Jessie Allen, Irene McCann and Isabel Cooper; contraltos, Mrs. Lamphear, Mrs. Block, Mrs. Mattson, Mrs. Don Campbell, Mrs. Stout, and the Misses Isabel Mitchell, Elizabeth Higman and LaRue Higman; tenors, Messrs. Wilkinson, Poole, Sterritt, Fowler, Ogdon, Smith, Shanahan, Block; basses, Messrs. Gale, Saltonstall, O'Neil, Edwards.

Heartiest praise should be given for the tireless and sympathetic work of Mrs. Stelter in the difficult task of training and direction. Her firm grasp of all parts of the musical movement never faltered and her leadership was an inspiration not only to the singers but to the audience as well.

Mrs. Balch, at the organ, also was most accurate and sympathetic in spite of having bad but one opportunity for complete rehearsal upon the Charlevoix organ. Many of our Charlevoix people heard for the first time the fine contralto singing of Miss Shaw, of East Jordan.

The pastor, Dr. Mattson, voiced the feelings of all in expressing appreciation of the interchurch courtesy represented by the combined presentation and the pleasure afforded by being able to give the program again in our sister church of the Presbyterian faith in East Jordan.

At the close of the vesper service, the music committee, assisted by members of the Mary Brewster Circle, served a delightful luncheon of sandwiches, coffee, ice cream and cake to the local and visiting musicians and other East Jordan friends who were present.

APRIL MEETING WELL ATTENDED

W. C. T. U. MET WITH MRS. L. E. BENTON

Mrs. R. B. Armstrong Led Interesting Study Program on "Women's Place in Politics"

The April meeting of the Women's Christian Temperance Union was held last Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. L. E. Benton on Bridge street and was very well attended.

Mrs. Wm. Poole led a very helpful devotionnl service and Miss Annie Metcalf rend n short sketch of the life of Mrs. Mary T. Lathrop, a pioneer temperance worker and for many years state president of the Union. The Michigan Legislative Fund is named in her honor, also the April Red Letter Day.

Mrs. R. B. Armstrong had charge of the study program on the topic, "Woman's Plnce in Politics," and gave an exceedingly interesting and instructive talk, interspersed with readings from current periodicals.

The speaker suggested that women who have raised their families or nre otherwise freed from home duties, mnke a study of politics, and use their time in helping to solve the public questions of the dny. That women should be cnreful about embracing n cause or action just because some organization has endorsed it. That women should refrain from urging legislation which will further overtax the federal government. That women should refuse to countonance pnrty auxiliaries and insist on equal membership with the men in political organizations. That women should protest unceasingly against the things that are demoralizing and suggestive of evil.

Announcement was mnde that Mrs. Stella B. Robin, state vice president at large, and Mrs. Hattia Lockoff, district president, will be here enrly in May (probably the 5th) to condact a County Institute.

The next regular meeting of the Union will he held May 14th, witb Mrs. McMillan. Mrs. Harsha will be the leader.

AVOID LOSSES ON THE DOLLIES

A MINUTE A DAY MAKES MILKING PAY

Only Three Distinct Type of Cows and You Should Pick the Type That Pays

One more minute per cow per day spent in weighing out the feed consumed and milk produced by each animal, would show the dairyman which of his cows are really working for him and which nre lonfing on the job, according to the Larrowe Institute of Animnl Economics. Thirty-one seconds per milking is all the time the farmer needs to keep tab on the performance of each of the cows in his herd.

"The majority of dariymen who do not keep records of the feed consumption or milk production of the cows, are working under the delusion that the keeping of such records would take up more time than they could well afford to spare," according to the institute. "They are wrong. Actual timing under practical conditions conducted by the the institute, shows that it takes only eleven seconds more per cow for each of two feedings to weigh out the exact feed, than it takes where the feed is not weighed. To weigh and record the milk from each cow was found to take only twenty seconds more per milking than it takes to just dump the milk over the cooler, or forty seconds for the two milkings. In all, no more than sixty-two seconds, or about a minute, is required to have a complete record of each cow's feed consumption and milk production. If that extra minute devoted to keeping records for sny twenty cows, should reveal that one of them was n typical waster—incapable of producing milk in profitable quantities—the dairyman would not only be saved the countless hours devoted to its feeding and care, but he would find that he was better off at the end of the year with the remnining nineteen cows than he wns with the original twenty.

"Roughly speaking, there are only three distinct types of cows. The Susies, who nre good lookers, but simply haven't the capacity when it comes to the milk pail. All feeds they get nbove the amount required to produce their limited quantities of milk nnd keep them in condition, are wasted. The Bettics are the thin, emacinted creatures who look as though they were ready to lie down nnd quit, but which have an inherited ability to produce milk thnt will often lead them to take it right off their own backs. Generally these are sndly underfed, so that they nre using only a portion of their capacity. Then there are the Dollies—the army of waster cows that simply can't produce milk profitably. They eat and eat and their owners have neither beef nor milk to show for it. They are overdae at the hutcher's. Such cows nre in every herd where the dairyman does not feed in accordance with milk capncity and prodaction. Keeping feed and milk records will show the dairyman how to profit from the Susies, cash in fully on the Betties, and how to avoid losses on the Dollies.

Mrs. Lizzie Powell will be at her home after this week and ready for sewing. 406 W. Hurlbut street, phone 402.—Adv. 15t2.

WARN CAMPERS AND SMOKERS

IZAAK WALTON CLUB URGES FIRE PROTECTION

Twenty-Seven Per Cent of Forest Fires Said to Be Due to Campers and Smokers

"Fire protection of cutover lands will solve the reforestation problem" said A. D. Osborn, prominent Wiscousin lumberman, in a recent address before the Izaak Walton League of America. "Lands naturally restock themselves with timber if fire is kept out. The crime agninst timber has been the indifference of the public to the prevention and sappression of forest fires." He said that experience is proving that no officinl fire detection and fire fighting force can gunrnntee thnt great acreages will not be burned over nt times unless there is also the cooperation of every resident, settler, camper, hunter and fisherman, in the prevention and early detection of fires. "Only 2 per cent of forest fires are caused by lumbermen" said Mr. Osborn. "Aboat 10 per cent are incendiary and 27 per cent are cnused by campers and smokers. A citizenry which is alive to the losses caused by fires and ever ready to take precautions to prevent them, is worth more than an army of thousands in suppressing them after they have gained headway in a dry season."

He said that all authorities now agree that the solution of the fire problem is the real conservation issue nnd next to it is the problem of timber taxation, which forces early cutting and makes regrowing anprofitable. "Who can afford to grow a crop that can be harvested only at the end of a period running from 75 to 250 years with annual taxes and no guarantee thnt fires and other risks are elminnted."

The speaker said that following fire protection and tax reform, federnl and state nnrticipation in a real way is the next grent step toward renl productive forestry. "A reluctant million is squeezed out of congress to buy timber land on water sheds and its members hasten to approprinte 75 million dollars annually that a joy-riding public may scorch along concrete ronds through fire scarred and treeless barrens." He urged that the Izaak Walton League hring such fnets before the public and "drill into the mind of every living soul that carelessness with fire in a forest is a crime."

VANZANT RESIDENCE DAMAGED BY BLAZE

Monday Morning Fire Caused By Over-heated Stove Pipe

Fire caused from nn overheated stove pipe, resulted in considerable damage Monday morning to the residence of Caleb VanZant on Antrim street.

The blaze started in a bedroom on the second floor of the building and had gained quite a start before the alarm was turned in by the family. By the time the department arrived the fire was burning fiercely. Practically nothing was saved from the second floor, but everything downstairs was saved. The building and contents were well covered by insurance and rebuilding will be started nt once.

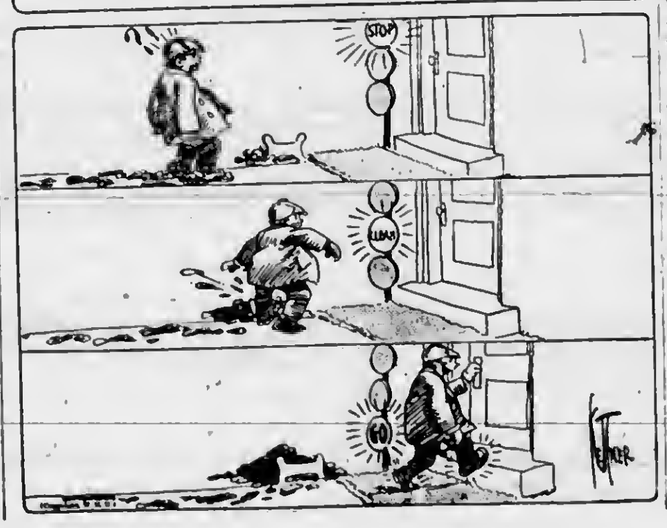
Home Traffic Signals



ALPENA BUSINESS MEN NOW ORGANIZED

Will Carry on Heavy Campaign During Coming Season

There seems to be a general wakening up of cities and towns of Northern Michigan and many are planning on advertising their attractinns. Alpena is the latest to get in line. The following appeared in the Cheboygan Democrat regarding them:

"Business men of Alpena have organized the Alpena Resort & Service bureau with a three fold purpose behind it—to advertise Alpena's recreational nttractions, to make it easy for outsiders to reach Alpena and to give visitors maximum service when they arrive.

"The man who invests in Floridn is foolish if he passes up Michigan opportunities," said H. J. Kurrasch. He cited the instance of a southern Michigan man who sold a piece of resort property for $12,000, patting his Michigan money in Florida real estate. Meanwhile Mr. Kurrasch said, the Michigan property was sold a second time for $33,000 to a man who sub-divided it on the basis of $250,000.

"Mayor Dafoe declared that the development of the resort possibilities of Alpena would mean more than the securing to the city of two or three large industries."

ASSUMES NEW POST APRIL 1

ADVANCEMENT DUE TO CLOSE ATTENTION TO WORK

Harry O. Mohrmann, Vice President of One of Detroit's Leading Financial Institutions

Harry O. Mohrmann, for five years deputy commissioner of the state banking department, has resigned to become vice president and acting executive officer of the American Trust Co., Detroit, and will assume his new post May 1.

The American Trust company has been active for the last 20 years as one of Detroit's leading institutions. Because of his broad experience, Mr. Mohrmann is believed to be particularly well qualified for his new duties, which include planning and supervision of a sound expansion program to be undertaken by the company. In taking over his new office, Mr. Mohrmann will sever a connection of nine years' duration with the state department of banking. Appointed bank examiner in 1917, he was soon promoted to the position of chief bank examiner, and a year later became depaty banking commissioner, in which capacity he has acted for five years.

Throughout these years of service Mr. Mohrmann has maintained an intimate contact with bankers and business men throughout the state. Before taking his state position Mr. Mohrmann was assistant cashier of the Charlevoix County Bank, and assistant cashier of the Citizens bank at Ellsworth.

The Courier with other Charlevoix friends of Mr. Mohrmann extend congratulations. We are pleased and honored that another Charlevoix young business man has made good in his chosen profession.

TO ORGANIZE TEMPLE OF PYTHIAN SISTERS

Meeting Called For Friday Evening At K. of P. Club Rooms

A meeting of the wives, sisters and daughters of Pythians of Charlevoix, and all others eligible, has been called for Friday evening of this week, to be held at 7:30 o'clock in the Pythian club rooms.

The purpose of the meeting is to organize a Temple of Pythian sisters. Numerous requests have been received in past years from those interested in the lodge to organize a Temple of Pythian Sisters in Charlevoix. A good time is promised those who attend the meeting Friday evening and it is hoped that all those interested will turn out.

Card of Thanks

We wish to thank the neighbors and friends, the Rebekah and Maccabee lodges and all those who gave the beautiful floral tokens and rendered their assistance and words of sympathy during our recent bereavement. "HITCH" MAKES A GREAT HIT

CLEVER ENTERTAINER APPEARS AT K. P. HALL

Convulses His Listeners With a Series of Side-splitting Mimicries and Impersonations

Members of Pine Lake Lodge No. 122, Knights of Pythias, and their friends to the number of about one hundred twenty-five men, met at the castle hall Friday evening and enjoyed a most excellent banquet, climaxed by the unrivaled Charles Hitchcock, entertainer and characterist, in several of his inimitable numbers.

At the close of the banquet, Dr. W. W. Mitchell, chosen by the lodge as toastmaster, spoke in behalf of the order, its aims and objects. "It is my belief that a fraternal order, whether Pythian or otherwise, should be a lending factor in bringing about better social conditions and a more united bond of friendship among the men of the community," said Mr. Mitchell. "This will be one of the aims of the Pythian lodge. The meeting tonight is one of the first steps in this direction, to be followed by later functions of like nature," he said.

During the progress of the banquet several songs were rendered under the leadership of Charles Hamlin, who in several individual solos, made a hit with the crowd and was highly applauded.

The program closed with the excellent performance of Charles Hitchcock, who kept his audience in a jovial mood for the remainder of the evening, and did some extremely clever impersonation work, his characterization of Jiggs of "Bringing Up Father" fame, in the role of a ward politician, being especially side-splitting.

Pine Lake Lodge No. 122, Knights of Pythias, has staged a remarkable come-back. Twice burned out, once in the County Bank building fire and about a year later in the disastrous blaze that ruined the Odd Fellow building, the lodge today has the largest membership since its organizntion.

Its present quarters in the new Bank building are completly equipped with new fixtures and its weekly sessions are well attended. The entertainment Friday evening is but one of the enjoyable social sessions scheduled during the coming year.

ALBION GLEE CLUB HERE FRIDAY EVENING

Charlevoix Concert Part of Annual Tour

Charlevoix music lovers will have the opportunity to hear Michigan's champion Glee Club when the Albion College Men's Glee Club invades this city next Friday evening to appear in concert at the Methodist Episcopal church.

Under the leadership of Director G. Calvin Ringgenberg the twenty-five singers will present a well balanced program of classical numbers assisted by a string trio, a quartett, and several outstanding vocalists.

Hailed in more than a dozen cities on its recent midwinter tour by capacity audiences it is estimated that the singers entertained more than fifteen thousand people; one audience of three thousand alone.

This is not the first time the Albion Glee Club has appeared in Charlevoix; but it is the first since the organizntion was the unanimous winner of the State championship at Kalamazoo last spring. Hence added interest is being shown and indications are that a record crowd will greet them when they take the platform Friday evening. The Charlevoix concert is a part of the annual spring tour and is one of the nine appearances that is to be made. This is the club's nineteenth concert season.

Watch Your Breakfast

Energetic Mornings Depend on Breakfast —Start Always with Quaker Oats

HOW you feel all morning depends largely on what you eat for breakfast. Thousands have anenergetic forenoons because of wrong breakfast eating.

To feel right, you must have a well-balanced, complete breakfast ration. At most other meals — lunch and dinner—you get it. But breakfast is a hurried meal, often badly chosen.

Thus Quaker Oats, containing 16% protein, food's great tissue builder; 58% carbohydrate, its great energy element, plus all-important vitamines and the "bulk" that makes laxatives seldom needed, is the dietetic urge of the world today.

It is food that "stands by" you through the morning. Quick Quaker cooks in 3 to 5 minutes. That's faster than plain toast. Don't deny yourself the natural stimulation this rich food offers.

WIDELY KNOWN W. C. T. U. WORKER

Interesting News Received by Mrs. John Jolliffe

Mrs. John Jolliffe of this city has just received a letter from her stepdaughter, Miss Rhena Mosher, who is widely known as a great worker in the interest of the W. C. T. U. for a long time—six or seven years more or less—who was national secretary and lecturer these long yeurs and is widely known through the press, even by some of the ladies of Charlevoix who belong to that organization.

Miss Mosher divided her work, laboring in the southern states in the winter and in northern states in the summer time on account of climatic conditions, so she had a large field of work. She was holding conventions all over this lurge territory and had varied experiences, some of which were distressing and some very comical and laughable. The thought of a young lady, all alone, paddling her own canoe, a stranger meeting strangers all the time through so many years. Yet her heart was in her work.

There were many varied circumstances which we might mention, but it might take too long, where she held various conventions, one in the city of Milwaukee where they were royally entertained, where they were furnished a beautiful, large building by the city and the mayor and other officials ordered all the saloons and bars closed while the convention lasted. Pretty good for that great beer city. They all appreciate it and the convention was a successful one.

We refer to another instance: She had an invitation to the international convention to be held in Scotland. For some time it was her great desire to hear those European ladies talk, but she had to reply that she could not attend on account of her mother's illness, which later resulted in death.

A little while ago Miss Mosher fell and broke her leg. She has recovered from this injury. She recently married and is now living in Massachusetts, but has not given up her work in connection with the W. C. T. U. and other activities.—Contributed.

"Now we go, Bob," he said.

We entered the water almost together, and swam side by side down the anchorage toward the James. Peter, despite his discomfort at sea, was a remarkably powerful swimmer, thanks to his lifetime in the wilderness country of the frontier.

"The tide will take care of the dead men," I panted, stroking for all I was worth to keep apace with the Dutchman.

A whistle shrilled again aboard the James.

"Ja," said Peter. "Her anchor goes opp, Bob. We hurry!"

He was a dozen strokes ahead of me at the end. I found him hanging on to the foot of the rudder and calmly treading water. Forward the capstan was clunking to a steady yo-heing and trumpling of feet. Yards were banging, sails were shatting, men were shouting and calling.

I looked up at the stern windows, so high above us. From our precarious perch on the rudder the James towered like Spyglass mountain, touchable but unattainable. Almost I could have cried out to my great-uncle and hailed, him to have us hauled aboard. But common sense warned me he would certainly seize upon the opportunity to send us back to the Walrus as clinching evidence of his good faith. And I had no desire to face Flint with those two dead men to account for.

"What's to do?" I whispered to Peter, whose eyes were roving over the lofty stern. "We cannot bide here. Once she has way on her, we'll be tossed off."

"Ja," agreed Peter. "You see dot shiny picture oop there?"

He indicated a golden sunburst, carved across the stern beneath the cabin windows.

"Yes," I answered, puzzled.

"I climb oop on der rudder, andt I holdt me on to der roundness in der middle. Andt you climb oop on my shoulders andt into der cabin windows, ja."

"But you? How will you—"

"You t'row me a rope."

He scrambled on to the rudder and slowly spread-eagled himself upward against the scrollwork which covered the stern. His hands, feeling blindly above his head, sought for and found a deep indentation in the rays below the center of the sunburst, and with this to cling to, he climbed a foot or two higher on to a shallow ridge which ran across the stern, a shelf scarce wide enough to give him toehold.

"Now you climb, Bob," he grunted.

The rudder I surmounted with ease, standing erect with a hand on one of Peter's legs to steady me. I stepped up to the ridge upon which the Dutchman stood with no more difficulty, holding to his leather belt. Then I changed my hand-hold to a ridge in the carving, and by his direction braced the toes of one foot in the slack of his belt as I heaved myself upward. Peter grunted. That was all.

I found a new hand-hold and brought my other foot up on to Peter's shoulder and stood erect there. Reaching upward now, better than two tall mens' height above the waterline, my groping finger-tips were still below the level of the stern windows. Peter sensed my difficulty.

"On my heandt," he grunted.

I carefully lifted one foot, selected another hand-grip and mounted Peter's tow locks. Again I explored upward with one arm stretched to the limit of safety, but I failed by inches to clutch the sill of the stern windows.

"Jump," sobbed Peter.

"But you!"

"Jump!"

The rudder clacked as it was put over, and the James heeled slightly to the breeze.

I jumped. Peter sagged beneath me, but the fingers of my right hand fastened upon the ledge of the window. I heard a splash, and caught hold with my left hand.

"Ooop!" spluttered Peter from the water.

The rest was child's play compared to what had preceded it. The carving afforded toe-holds in plenty, and soon I had a leg over the window-sill and looked down at Peter trailing in the James' wake as he clung to the shelf which crossed the stern perhaps a foot above the water. He dared no longer hold to the rudder.

His big face was so white that it frightened me, and I scrabbled inboard without stopping to make sure the cabin was empty. But my luck was with me, and I scurried around to find a rope. This was a hopeless quest in that luxurious apartment, so I ran up the companionway and just inside the door to the deck came upon a lead line, coiled and hung to a hook, which I appropriated.

Altogether these movements consumed less time than is required to describe them; but when I returned to the stern windows Peter was gone. I leaned out and stared back at the James' creaming wake—and a white arm flashed in a gesture of appeal twenty feet astern. I cast the lead behind him, and he caught the line as it settled into the water, cut the lead free with the dead man's knife at his belt, looped the slack under his shoulders, and with my feverish help hauled himself back to the shelf above the water line.

I lacked the strength to draw him up; but I fastened my end of the line to the cabin table, which was bolted to the floor, and then, foot by foot, Peter toiled upward. He was so weary at the last that I must pull him through the window, and he fell in a limp across the table, puddling the polished surface with the sea-water that streamed off him and the blood from his scarred hands.

A bottle of the aqua vitae my great-uncle favored stood by his place, and I took this and poured a liberal tot between Peter's lips. He staggered to his feet, blinking his eyes and red as a school miss.

"All right, Bob," he squeaked. "I be all right, ja."

His eyes chanced upon the lead-line, still fast to the table's leg, and he stopped and unknotted it and dropped it out of the window.

"We better not stay here," he muttered. "Neen! If Murray sees us—"

"Oh, my Gawd!".

Ben Gunn goggled at us from the companionway.

"Drowned, they be!" he gasped to himself. "He done for 'em, Flint did!"

I was afraid he would run out on deck and cry an alarm, and I started for him to prevent this.

"Be still, Ben," I said. "We don't mean to hurt you."

He plucked up a little courage when I spoke.

"Tain't right for ye to talk," he objected. "I never heard tell as how sperets—"

"We're not spirits," I answered. "We are as alive as you are. Here, feel this."

He shrank back as I placed my clammy, wet hand upon his neck; but the touch reassured him.

"Ye ain't sperets, says you," he repeated amazedly. "Nor ye ain't dead. And seein' as you're here, why, it do stand to reason as how ye ain't aboard the Walrus, which is where ye was and where ye oughter be."

He shook his head.

"'Tis perfectly natural," I retorted. "Master Corliner and I have escaped from the Walrus."

Ben came a step or two into the cabin and stared hard at Peter. Then he turned a disapproving eye upon the pools of water we had sprinkled on the table and the rich carpet.

"Well, it do look to be 'ee twn," he conceded grudgingly. "But ye ha' mucked up the cabin awful, and the captain will like to ha' me (meed to the main for a dozen wt' the ca' Maybe so," he agreed. "But he won't like it that ye come aboard this way."

I seized upon his opening without scruple.

"Yes, he'll hold it against you, Ben. 'Tis a shame."

He shivered, and I appreciated what my great-uncle's wrath must be.

"Ye wouldn't let him now! Master Ormerod! Oh, say ye wouldn't! Ye don't want poor Ben Gunn to be screamin' on the triangle."

"That I don't," I assented warmly. "You must hide us, Ben. Nobody will know that you had aught to do with our coming aboard; and indeed Captain Murray will not care, I think. 'Twas not of his own will he gave us to Flint."

"If 'tis so, why don't 'ee go up on the poop and tell the captain now?"

"He'd have to send us back to Captain Flint. You wouldn't like to be sent aboard the Walrus to stay, Ben."

Ben Gunn cocked his head on one side.

"I ain't so sure," he answered. "Maybe Flint would let me wear seaman's gear and tar my hair."

"If I ever command a ship you shall be a tarry sailorman aboard her, Ben," I promised. "But if you don't hide us quickly, Ben, I'll never be able to make good on it."

He caught my hand in his.

"You jes come along o' me. Ben Gunn knows a thing or two, he does. I'll show 'ee, my master. You jest come along o' me."

Peter and I scaped after him up the companionway to a door for'ard of the staterooms we occupied, which led by way of a steep flight of ladders-stairs to the galley and service quarters, a space partitioned off from the vast sweep of the gundeck. Ben unhooked a lanthorn from the wall, opened a trap in the deck and signed us to follow him. At the bottom of a second ladder we found ourselves in a lazaret such as had been our prison aboard the Walrus. But there was this difference in our surroundings: That they were clean. The walls were whitewashed, and around them were ranged kegs and pipes of wines, ale and rum, and racks laden with bottles of various liquors.

"'Tis Murray's wine-cellar," I commented aloud.

Ben Gunn deposited the lanthorn in the middle of the floor and approached his mouth to my ear.

"Aye, and he keeps his treasure 'ere—when so he be has any," he whispered throatily.

"Doth he never come here?"

"Nut he. Nor the maygurs, neither. Only Ben Gunn."

"What shall we do for food?"

Ben wiggled with embarrassment.

"Jest you leave that to Ben Gunn. He'll feed ye well, my master. Aye, that he will. And fetch ye clothes from the cabin. But don't 'ee forget the promise, sir. Oh, say ye won't!"

"I won't," I assured him. "But you must get back to the cabin and tidy up the mess we made. Haste, man!"

He scampered up the ladder as if the devil were after him—or Paradise within view.

And during the two days of our stay in the wine-cellar of the Royal James he was as good as his word. He fed us well. He brought me a sufficiency of clothing. And he procured for Peter a quantity of linen and cotton cloth, with thread and needles, with which the Dutchman fashioned himself garments to cover his inconveniently large body.

On the evening of the second day, having learned from Ben that the James had logged several hundred knots since leaving the Rendezvous, we decided 'twould be safe to appear before Murray, and we took an opportunity whilst Ben was serving his dinner to ascend through the galley and present ourselves in the main cabin.

My great-uncle glanced up as he heard the shuffling of our feet on the carpet. A furrow of perplexity was dug betwixt his eyes. Otherwise he revealed no astonishment.

"'Ods-blood! Here is a pretty coil! Peter, I'll wager I have you to thank for it."

"Ja," said Peter, and sat himself in his accustomed place at the table.

"How did you compass it?"

I told him, and he stared curiously at Peter, placidly eating across the table from him.

"I might have known it, Peter. No man ever held you in constraint against your will. I might have known it. What a mess! My plans and calculations all askew! Peter, y' have played at bowls with destiny! A half hour since I saw my way clear. Now I must plot it fresh. Stap me, what a colt! What moved you to such a desperate course, Robert? Was it to be with me? Or was it O'Donnell's lass?"

I hesitated, frankly loath to hurt him.

"I was concerned for her," I admitted finally. "'Tis a ship is no fit place for a maid, as I have said before."

"'Tis better than some," he answered.

But my reply did not seem to annoy him. His gaze dwelt upon my face for several moments longer.

"Well, well," he said as he began to pace the carpet. "We must make the best of it, lad."

CHAPTER X

The Treasure Ship

There was no hint of triumph in my great-uncle's manner as the sloop came about and lay to under our lee quarter; nor did he exhibit excitement when she unloosed the stout boat she towed astern and a half-dozen swarthy fellows commenced to pull it toward us. He indulged in a pinch of snuff and took his station by the starboard rail at the break of the poop. Peter and I followed him. Besides us there was only Martin, who stood aft by the man at the wheel.

The rowboat was as infinitesimal as an insect in those tossing wastes; but the man at the steering-oar guided it with uncanny skill, up the toppling crests that threatened to crush it, down the dizzy steeps that fade fair to hurl it to the ocean's oozy bottom, and brought it to rest a scant fifty feet from the James' hull, his long sweep feeling and twisting to main-

To Those Who Judge Quality by Price

The quality of Ford cars cannot be judged by the prices at which they are sold—because Ford prices are made possible by conditions that are absolutely unique in the automotive industry.

From mine to market the Ford car is the work of a single organization. The Company owns and operates the mines and forests that furnish the raw materials for its products. This material is carried over Ford transportation routes, fabricated in Ford mills, manufactured in Ford plants—and the finished product is sold to the public through Ford dealers.

The following statement, previously made in an advertising message, is repeated because of its significance to the public:

"If any other manufacturer endeavored to produce a car similar to the Ford, according to the high standards of quality in material and workmanship used by the Ford Motor Company and with the same tried and proved design, it would be impossible to offer it at anything like Ford prices. And it is well to note that even with less costly design they have not met Ford prices."

CHARLEVOIX COURIER.

Dear Mr. Editor:

It was with plensure that I read in the Courier of last week that Mr. Fred W. Henshaw, staff correspondent of the Detroit News had been here. I have known Mr. Henshaw several months, he is a very fine gentleman as well as representing one of Michigan's largest and best newspapers.

His trip, mnde for the purpose of writing an nrtlcle on the Real Estate activity in Michigan, was taking him to nearly all of the lake front resorts of our state and I am sure that what he has to say regarding Charlevoix will be most interesting and valuable to us. I might add that while here Mr. Henshaw purchased a very desirable lot at Boulder Park, showing that he certainly wns well pleased with Charlevoix-the-Beautiful.

Very truly yours,

"UNDER THE LAURELS" THURSDAY EVENING

Charlevoix County Normal to Present Their Annual Class Play

The Charlevoix County Normal has spent several weeks prepuring for the presentation of "Under the Laurels," a comedy-drama of life in the hill country, in five acts.

The play abounds in sparkling humor and intense dramatic moments, and has many pleasing situations, highly entertaining. The scene is luid in the land of night riders and masked men, where superstition and law wnlk hnnd in hand. A plot to deprive Rose Milford of her fortune is finally brought to naught by the efforts of her brother and the faithfulness of the servants. Ky Brantford, the unscrupulous partner of Miss Milford's dead fnther, and the heartless Mrs. Milford, Rose's mother by adoption, are both brought to feel the hand of justice.

No effort has been spared to make this nn evening chuck full of entertainment. Lou's Royal Canadian orchestrn has been engaged to ease the dull moments between acts.

Don't forget the matinee at 3:30 o'clock Thursday afternoon. The evening performance begins at 8:30.

APRIL 18-24 AMERICAN FOREST WEEK

To Be Observed By Schools Throughout United States

T. F. Marston, State Chairman of American Forest Week, April 18 to 24, has appointed Archie Belding as chairmun of Charlevoix county to promote observance of that week among clubs and schools of the county. Through this means it is planned to stimulate interest in tree creation und conservntion.

Principal P. O. North of Charlevoix high school and Helen L. Mayer, principal Charlevoix County Normal, have been requested to have spenkers address the students on a forest topic during the week. Forest Week is an annual event, proclaimed by President Coolidge, who stresses the opinion that the public as yet has not sensed the value of growing a timber crop. Muny who are fostering the movement are desirous of seeing established either county, township, or school district forests. This year every Michigan county and community is giving the forest idea a boost. Trees, and many of them, are a vital necessity to Michigan's welfare, not ns timber alone but from many economic factors.

AT THE MOVIES

Cast of Favorities in "I Want My Man."

How will the future judge of America in its present era of social dissolution which came as a reaction to the anxiety and agitation of the last war?

That is the question evoked by Milton Sills and Doris Kenyon in their latest First Nationnl drama, "I want My Man" which opens Saturday and Sundny, April 17-18 at the Palace Theatre.

The picture has been well cast. Phyllis Haver, May Allison and Paul Nicholson give excellent renditions as the victims of jazz mania. Kate Bruce and Theresa Maxwell Conover, as a pnir of mothers give contrasting portrayals of equal merit. Little Frankie Evans shows promise in n child role.

Neil Hamilton College Boy in "New Brooms"

"Neil Hnmilton will give every young mnn who sees him in 'New Brooms' a distinct shock," says William de Mille, noted author-producer-director.

It's becnuse Hamilton portrays in this new de Mille picture the typical youth of today, cnreless, cnrefree and extremely thoughtless.

"How many boys stop to think of the sncrifices their dads made to put them through college?" asks de Mille.

At the Palnce Theatre, Tuesdny and Wednesday, April 20-21.

Coleridge's Poem Classic, "The Ancient Mariner"

As "The Ancient Mnriner" has stood supreme in the world of classic poems since 1789, the photoplny based on that immortal offering will stand ns a tremendous artistic achievement for years. This production which was made by Fox Films will open a two dny run at the Paluce Theatre on Thursday and Friday, April 22-23.

The M. E. ladies will hold their Easter supper in the church parlors, Wednesday, April 28.—Adv. 15-t1.

CHARLEVOIX CO. FARMER

Takes New Lease on Life

Mr. Antoine Sharrow, R. F. D. No. 4, Charlevoix, is a booster for Pepgen. In his statement he wants others to know how this wonderful medicine helped him, when all other remedies had failed.

"My stomach wns so bad even pus came up when I coughed, after eating I would be in distress and puffed up condition, and my stomach would feel as though it would burst. My appetite was fair, but what I ste soured, and gave me no nourishment.

"After taking Pepgen a short while I began to get relief. I am still taking it and it has practically cured the catarrh of my stomach. The gas is entirely gone, my appetite is good, I am gaining in weight, nnd I feel like a new man. Pepgen surely helped me and I will keep right on taking it."

Signed, Antoine Sharrow,
Charlevoix, Mich.

Pepgen which is so highly recommended for stomach, kidney and liver troubles, stimulates the nerves in various parts of the body, purifies the blood, and is a great system builder.

In Charlevoix Pepgen is sold under a money-back gursntee, only by F. J. Fessenden, the druggist. If you wnnt to know more about this wonderful spring tonic, and health builder, ask him.

Of the original twenty members, the following seven were present: Mesdames Armstrong, A. F. Bridge, Fitch, Harsha, Mayne, Swinton and Shanahan.

REV. ELDRIDGE WILL LEAVE FOR STURGIS

His Four Year Pastorate Here Endeared Him to Community

Rev. Wm. Eldridge, pastor of the Church of God for the past four years or more, is about to move with his family to Sturgis, Michigan, to take up the work there, and expects to preach here for the last time on April 25th.

The good wishes of the community go with him. Rev. Eldridge has always been ready to cooperate with other christian workers and has labored early and late to build up the kingdom of God. His own church has prospered under his leadership and this community is a better place to live in because of his residence among us.

ATTRACTIONS FOR THE COMING WEEK

Saturday and Sunday, April 17 and 18

Milton Sills and Doris Kenyon in "I WANT MY MAN." To give up your husband because you thought he loved another. To sacrifice the love in your heart because it might make him happier. You have to be pretty brave—you'd have to have a soul as big as this girl's and then maybe in the end, after hardship and suffering and real womanly sacrifice, you'd win back your man like she did.

Also an Educational comedy, "The Fighting Tailor." Another educational picture, "Glow of the Lamp," will give you an idea of how your electric lamps are made.

Tuesday and Wednesday, April 20 and 21

Neil Hamilton and Bessie Love in "NEW BROOMS." 156,782 young men in America think they can run their father's business better than the old man can. Come and see one of the boys try it. Do your Spring screaming now. You'll find "New Brooms" here.

Also a Fox News Reel. Travel the world with the News Reels. The very best form of travel.

Thursday and Friday, April 22 and 23

Clara Bow and Earl Williams in "THE ANCIENT MARINER." Samuel Taylor Coleridge's poem portrayed in pictures. The most imaginative poem ever brought to life on the screen. A vital, pulsating modern story plus the most picturesque fantasy ever filmed.

Also an Educational comedy, "Officers of the Day." This picture is for the benefit of the Normal Class.

Will Charlevoix Give All Its Riches To Outsiders?

We keep hearing that the outside world is coming to Charlevoix to get rich out of our real estate boom.

The question is: Will Charlevoix let them make all the money?

If lake frontage is a good investment for outsiders, it is just as good for Charlevoix people.

I have plenty of lake frontage to sell.

A TALK WITH A CHARLEVOIX MAN

Mr. Mitchell Tells Something of Interest to Charlevoix Folks

There's nothing more convincing than the statement of someone you know and have confidence in. That's why this talk with Mr. Mitchell of State street, should be mighty helpful here in Charlevoix.

Robert Mitchell, 809 State St., Charlevoix, says: "I had a dragging ache through my back and when I bent over, sharp, knife-like pains darted across my kidneys. Mornings my back was lame and sore and as time passed, I got to feeling all out of sorts. My kidneys were weak and I often had to pass the secretions during the night. After using Doan's Pills, I was cured."

Mr. Sheldon has represented other companies in this territory at different times and is well known to the public.

Notice

To the owners of the lands herein described and all other persons interested:

You are hereby notified that a petition has been filed in my office and presented to the common council of the city of Charlevoix asking for an extension of the Newman's street trunk sewer from State street to Grant street, and that plats, plans and specifications, together with estimated cost of construction of such sewer extension, are now on file in my office for public examination.

That Monday, the 3rd day of May, 1926, at 8 o'clock p. m., has been fixed by said council when it would meet in the council rooms in said city for the purpose of hearing objections and suggestions relative to the construction of such sewer.

The district to be assessed for that part of the cost of construction of such sewer extension to be borne by special assessment on the lands and premises benefited thereby, is described as follows:

All lots, parts of lots, lands and premises situated in Newman street trunk sewer extension district, bounded by the following lines, viz: Beginning at a point on the west line of State street at its intersection with the center line of Newman street; thence along said center line of Newman street west to Custer street; thence south along Custer street and following the corporation line of the city of Charlevoix to a point one hundred (100) feet north of the north line of Stover Road; thence east along a line parallel with Stover Road but one hundred (100) feet north thereof Fifteen hundred thirty (1530) feet; thence north parallel to the west corporation line of the city of Charlevoix but fifteen hundred thirty (1530) feet east thereof to a point on the north line of Garfield avenue which point is the southeast corner of lot 241 of Upright and Hurlbut's addition to the city of Charlevoix; thence north along the east line of lots 241, 208, 183, 150, 125, 92 to the southwest corner of lot 90, all of Upright and Hurlbut's addition to the city of Charlevoix; thence along the south line of lots 90 and 88 to the southeast corner of lot 88, Upright and Hurlbut's addition to the city of Charlevoix; thence south to the southwest corner of lot 87, Upright and Hurlbut's addition to the city of Charlevoix; thence along the south line of lots 87, 86 and 85 to the southeast corner of lot 85, all in Upright and Hurlbut's addition to the city of Charlevoix; thence north on an extension of and on the east line of lot 74 to a point on said line one hundred (100) feet south of the south line of Newman street, thence along a line parallel to and one hundred (100) feet south of the south line of Newman street to its intersection with the west line of State street, thence north along the west line of State street to the place of beginning.

FINE STORY IN DETROIT NEWS

BEAVER ISLAND MAIL SERVICE FEATURED WITH VIEWS.

Michigan's Leading Daily Carries Three-fourths Page of Excellent Publicity.

Fred W. Henshaw, staff reporter on the Detroit Evening News, made Charlevoix a second visit about two weeks ago, shortly after the arrival of the aeroplane to carry mail to Beaver Island, and the result of his visit was contained in last Sunday's issue of that paper.

As will be remembered, Mr. Henshaw was in Charlevoix last winter looking for "dope" on winter sports in western Michigan, and his paper gave us a fine feature story on that subject. The purpose of his last visit here was to gather material on the real estate activities along the western and eastern coasts of the state, and, it might be said that he accidentally ran into the acroplane story. But, making no "never-minds" how he got the story, those who have read the finished product are unanimous in their opinion that he "done it up brown."

The result was that Charlevoix got three-quarters of a page feature story in one of Michigan's leading daily papers. Mr. Henshaw accompanied Capt. Donnellan on one of his trips to the island, interviewed many of the islanders and took excellent group pictures which were used along with his story. The article covered in detail the efforts of local men to obtain aeroplane service as a means of communication with the Island, related the flyer's trip from Chicago to Charlevoix and their accompanying troubles, told of the perils of taking mail to the Beavers over the ice, featured "Bowery Bill" Gallagher, and told incidents relating to happenings on the island. The story was well supported by the group picturs and speaks well of the writer's ability. His real estate article will appear later in the News.

Such advertising as Charlevoix has been getting out of the mail fracas, winter sports and other sources is of antold value to the town. Two Grand Rapids papers, Chicago and Detroit papers have been handling the story and just yesterdny a telegram was received from a New York City paper for a story on the areoplane being damaged at the island. It all puts Charlevoix on the map, and that is what we want.

IMPORTANT MEETINGS APRIL 29th AND 30th

State Specialists to Hold Blasting Demonstration

Plans have been completed to have N. A. Kessler, specialist in agricultural engineering, to conduct two blasting demonstrations using the latest government explosive pyrotol, which is identical with sodatol sold several years ago.

The first demonstration will be held at the farm of Steve Jermaine, residing first farm east of cemetery, one mile from Boyne Falls, at 2 o'clock p. m., slow time, on Thursday, the 29th of April.

The second to be held at the farm of Bert Elliott, about 4 1-2 miles south of Charlevoix, at 9:30 o'clock a. m., slow time, on Friday, the 30th of April.

While we do not think it is necessary to clear more land, we do think it is worth dollars and cents to take out a few stumps or stones that make life miserable in the fields you are attempting to cultivate efficiently. Is it not worth from five to ten cents to blow out some of those pesky stumps?

This pyrotol can be purchased for less than ten cents per pound, while dynamite will cost from two to three times as much, and Mr. Kessler will prove to you it is just as effective as higher priced material for many purposes. Plan to attend.

Buys May Street Property

Harry K. Graves has purchased the house and lot on May street, owned by Mrs. E. L. Johnson, known as the Riker house, just at the brow of the hill on May street. The property is well located and Mr. Graves expects to make his permanent home there.

BENEFIT PICTURE FOR NORMAL CLASS

Coleridge's "Ancient Mariner" to Be Shown at Palace Theatre

A more weird and striking creation than Coleridge's "Ancient Mariner,," which will be shown at the Palace theater on Thursday and Friday nights, April 22 and 23, for the benefit of the Charlevoix county normal class, is difficult to find.

Around this confusing and uncanny setting is woven a story of simplicity and human interest, and this in turn has been set to the rhythmic sequence of the silver sheet, making a picturization of extraordinary merit and charm. Each moment is filled with intense dramatic power, that stirs the most staid and set nature to consideration.

An added feature of the evening will be the music furnished by Loui's Royal Canadian orchestra, singing by that incomparable trio, Saltonstall, Dutcher and Davenport, and a comedy.

GEO. W. SWINTON LAID TO REST

AGED RESIDENT PASSES AT AN EARLY HOUR SATURDAY

President of Argo Milling Co. and for Many Years Resident of Copper Country.

Death entered the home of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. D. Swinton, 210 Dixon avenue, Saturday morning at 2:00 o'clock, and took therefrom the aged husband and kindly citizen, George D. Swinton, who had been in failing health for several years. A general breakdown and old age was the cause of his death, the final sickness covering a period of about a month.

The funeral was held from the Congregational church, Monday at 10:30 a. m., conducted by Rev. Bernard G. Matteson. Interment in Brookside cemetery.

George D. Swinton was born in Southampton, Canada, December 5, 1844, and was therefore 81 years of age. He had been a resident of Charlevoix for 14 years, coming here in the fall of 1911 from Calumet, upper peninsula, where he had lived from 1861 to the time of his removal to Charlevoix.

During his residence here he was connected with the Argo Milling Company, in the capacity of president. However, he lived a quite life, leaving practically all business matters to his son, Dr. A. A. Swinton, now deceased, and since his death, to his son-in-law, Harry A. Craig.

During his long residence in Calumet, he was employed by the Calumet & Hecla Mining Company, being one of its oldest employees. He was a pioneer in the copper mining part of Michigan, and saw the industry grow with its marvelous development, especially the growth of the company, he was connected with.

He was united in marriage in 1874 to Miss Martha Stanley. To this union were born four children, Dr. A. A. Swinton of this city, who died several years ago, Dr. Andrew Swinton of Marquette, Prof. Roy D. Swinton of Ann Arbor and Ione Swinton Craig of this city.

PRESENTED WITH ROCKER AND LAMP

Farewell Party Given Friday to Departing Pastor

The home of A. B. Chew on Antrim street was the scene of a pleasant surprise on Rev. and Mrs. Wm. Eldridge last Friday evening when about fifty of their many friends gathered in, bringing their well filled baskets to spend the evening.

The time was spent in visiting and singing. Mr. Chew then presented them with a nice rocker and lamp from their friends. Then about 10:00 o'clock a dainty lunch was served and the guests departed at a late hour expressing their regrets that Mr. and Mrs. Eldridge are so soon to leave Charlevoix, but wishing them success in their new pastorate.

Mrs. Lizzie Powell will be at her home after this week and ready for sewing. 406 W. Hurlbut street, phone 402.—Adv. 15t2.

MAIL AEROPLANE WRECKED IN ST. JAMES HARBOR

TURNED COMPLETELY OVER BY HIGH WIND THURSDAY NIGHT

PILOT DONNELLAN TELLS OF EVENTFUL TRIP TO ISLAND

Returned to Mainlaod Monday Morning With Dog Team aod Driver—Ice Conditions Bad

Charlevoix's mail aeroplane, reported lost either on the ice or in the waters of lake Michigan between this port and St. James, is now lying in a crippled condition in the harbor at St. James, and its pilot, Capt. J. F. Donnellan, is on his way to Chicago, with the expectation of driving back another plane to carry out his contact of three trips a week between this port and St. James.

Since Thursday afternoon of last week the community had been in a state of intense excitement over the failure of the return of the plane from its regular scheduled run to St. James. The plane, piloted by Capt. Donnellan, loaded with nine sacks of mail and a small amount of merchandise, left Charlevoix Thursday afternoon shortly after one o'clock, on a round trip run to the island. His failure to return that evening caused little apprehension, as it was thought weather conditions compelled him to stay over night. All eyes were directed toward the island Friday, with the hopes that the plane would appear in sight, and the hum of the motor would put at rest the uneasiness and unrest caused by his failure to return the previous day.

Late in the afternoon Friday, Alvin Yeider, Capt. Donnellan's mechanic, who was forced to stay here on account of the bulky mail cargo which filled the plane to capacity on Thursdays run, requested President F. E. Cartier of the Charlevoix Association of Commerce, to get in touch with Petoskey's broadcasting station, in an endeavor to find out if the plane reached the island on Thursday's run. This message was sent out on the air by station WBBP at ten minute intervals Friday evening and also during the noon hour Saturday: "If acroplnne is at St. James, or has been there and left; or if there is anything wrong with the plane or Capt. Donnellan, build a huge bonfire. If plane and pilot are safe, build no fire."

It was believed that in case of accident to Donnellan or plane, that a signal of this kind could be seen from the high bluffs at Cross Village, where watchers were stationed throughout the night. The Friday night and Saturday noon messages broadcasted were both plainly received by listeners-in at St. James.

Saturday a party composed of Mechanic Yeider, Eddie O'Neill, Harold Dutcher, Bill Myers, Sheriff Novack and son, drove to Cross Village, where arrangements were immediately made with Joe Davis and Pete Nelson, owners of the famous dog team which has so frequently made the run across the ice to St. James, to take Yeider from the mainland to the island. The start was made at day break Sunday morning.

Before reaching St. James, Yeider with the dog team and drivers met Capt. Donnellan, who had left the island in an effort to reach the mainland. However, he returned to Garden Island with the understanding that the party leave early the following marning for the mainland. Starting at 2:00 a. m. Monday morning, the homeward trip was safely made. Donnellan with Davis and the dog team reaching Cross Village at 11:40, where he immediately telephoned Charlevoix of his arrival. Yeider is now at the island working on the wrecked plane.

In an interview with Capt. Donnellan, he tells the following story of his adventurous trip: "I arrived at St. James harbor after a 20 minute run from Charlevoix and made my usual landing. There was a heavy wind which was increasing in velocity. With the assistance of several Beaver Islanders, I used four anchors and 12 new ropes in an effort to securely anchor the plane, which we parked near the shore opposite the coast guard station."

"Was about all in that night and retired early. During the night the wind increased, and records at the coast guard station showed it reached a velocity of 62 miles per hour. Sometime during the night it caught my machine turned it completely upside down, broke the propeller and both planes and otherwise damaged it. Repairs must be obtained from the manufacturer, transferred to the island, and it will take at least three days to put the plane in running order."

ORGANIZE TEMPLE OF PYTHIAN SISTERS

Charter Members Secured and Temporary Officers Named

At a well attended meeting held in the Pythian temple last Friday evening, plans were made for the organization of a Temple of Pythian Sisters.

After the purpose of the meeting had been explained to the ladies present, the following temporary officers were chosen to act until regular officers are elected: Pres., Mrs. A. L. Fitch, vice pres., Mrs. Clarence Wood; sec.-treas., Mrs. Grover Geneit. About sixty were in attendance and the project was met with much enthusiasm. The necessary charter members signed the application which will be forwarded to the headquarters of the Pythian Sisters of Michigan, with a request that a date be set for a grand lodge officer to come to Charlevoix to organize the order and install regular officers to be elected at that time.

The balance of the evening was spent at cards and judging from the enthusiasm with which the project was met, the new order is bound to be successful and a live organization.

SUMMER VISITOR DIES AT OAK PARK

Had Been Coming Here Summers Since 1883

Word has been received by Charlevoix friends of the death of Mrs. E. C. Ware at Oak Park, Ill., on March 29th. An attack of grippe developed into pneumonia which was the immediate cause of her death.

Mr. and Mrs. Ware began coming to Charlevoix in 1883 and have been regular summer visitors of the Belvedere Club since that time. Mr. Ware passed away several years ago, but Mrs. Ware has continued to come and she has been a liberal contributor to the church, hospital and other worthy interests in Charlevoix.

She is survived by three sons, Ralph, Walter and Robert of Chicago, who have always known Charlevoix as their summer home and who on account of their keen interest in boating and water sports are especially well known to our Charlevoix people.

CONDITION OF MICHIGAN CROPS

FALL GROWN GRAIN IN GOOD CONDITION

Average Farm Wage Higher Than Last Year and Hard to Get Even at Price Asked

Notwithstanding the fact that much wheat was sown unusually late last fall and attained only a small growth, it had apparently come through the winter in better condition than expected according to the April 1 report issued by L. Whitney Watkins, commissioner of Agriculture, and Verne H. Church Agricultural Statistcian, U. S. Bureau of Agriculturnl Economics, March is generally the most severe month on fall-sown grains but this year the ground was covered with snow during the greater part of the time. Correspondents reported an average condition of 76 per cent for Michigan, nine per cent below last year's figure on the same date and eight per cent lower than the ten-year average for April 1. As the crop was under the snow at the time of report, opinions varied greatly as to the true condition and a more definite statement can probably be made at the time of the next report.

The condition for the country as a whole is 84.1 per cent as compared with 68.7 per cent one year ago.

Farm Rental Values: The results of a special inquiry on this subject indicate that the average rental value of farms is $4.60 per acre; of plow lands, $5.80 per acre; and pasture lands, $2.30 per acre. The respective values of these three classes of lands are $81, $89 and $41 per acre.

Farm Wages: The average farm wages are sightly higher than one year ago. The rate by the month with board is $41 and without board, $57.25. Last year, they were $40 and $53, respectively. The day rate averages $2.50 with board and $3.25 without board. One year ago, they were $2.35 and $3.00, respectively.

For the United States, the monthly rate with board is $34.38, and without board, $48.80.

Farm Labor: The supply averages 80 per cent of normal, and the demand, 83 per cent. The ratio of supply to demand is, therefore, 97 per cent. For the entire country, the supply averages 89.2 per cent of normal, and the demand, 91.0 per cent, the ratio of supply to demand being 98 per cent.

Bridge Street Property Sold

A property transfer of considerable importance occurred last week when Clarence N. Bridge purchased the Benj. Brown property at the corner of Bridge and Mason streets, occupied by the American Express company's office, Ted Pearl's barber shop and McCann's bakery. No alterations or changes in the property are contemplated at the present time, according to Mr. Bridge.

The Ladies Aid of the M. E. church will hold an all day baked goods sale and warm sugar luncheon in the building occupied by Nell's Cafe, 1st door north of Hotel Charlevoix, on Saturday, April 24.—Adv. 16t1.

LINK MIAMI UP WITH THE NORTH

PLANS UNDER WAY FOR A THROUGH HIGHWAY

Route of Proposed Road North of Cadillac Left to Board of Directors

A meeting was held in Grand Rapids last Wednesday for the purpose of securing approval of the route of the proposed new national highway linking Miami with Petoskey and other northern Michigan resorts, and to elect four men as Michigan directors of the James Whitcomb Riley Highway association.

Invitations were sent to more than 130 members of good roads association, including the M-13 Paved Way Association, Governor Groesbeck, the lieutenant governor, state highway commissioner, representatives of the Grand Rapids city government, Kent county road commissioners, M-11 Paved Way association and other active bodies in the state including all chambers of commerce on M-13.

The proposed route follows M-13 as far as Cadillac, but from Cadillac to Petoskey it may follow M-13 or may be diverted by way of Traverse City and Charlevoix to Petoskey. This was one of the points decided at the meeting.

It was decided at Wednesday's meeting that the route would be M-13 from the southernmost point of the state to Fife Lake corner, then the new State highway known as U. S. No. 31 from Fife Lake corner to M-11 near Traverse City, the route to be determined later by the Federal government and the State Highway Department, then M-11 to the Straits of Mackinaw. Considerable sentiment developed at the meeting in regards to the route, many believing it should go all the way by M-13 to Petoskey, while others believed it should go via Traverse City and Charlevoix to Petoskey. Northern members of the board of eighteen members were: John L. A. Galster, Petoskey; Glen C. Powers, Traverse City, Perry F. Powers, Cadillac; Robert Bridge, Charlevoix; W. J. Pearson, Boyne Falls; N. O. Linton, Mackinaw City and J. C. McLin, Pellston.

Outside of Michigan, it is said, considerable progress with the James Whitcomb Riley highway has been made. This has been especially true in Florida, and such other southern states as were in a position to do anything definite in promoting the venture.

Michigan, standing to gain more than any other state from the final completion of the highway proposed, with the possible exception of Florida, has expressed its intention, unofficially, to get squarely behind the movement and do everything within its power to further the project.

CHARLEVOIX GROUP TO MEET APRIL 24TH

Sewing Project in Basement of Congregational Church

The Charlevoix Group of the County Extension Clothing Project will meet in the basement of the Congregational church at 9:30 a. m. slow time, on Saturday, April 24th, and extending until the middle of the afternoon.

Miss Margaret Harris of M. S. C. will be the specialist in charge and will give the first instruction to the various leaders, who will be present, representing classes formed in their respective communities.

This meeting will take place of the one scheduled for the 14th, which had to be postponed due to the conditions of the roads.

It is expected that 10 districts will be represented by leaders. If interested in becoming a member, by all means get in touch with your nearest leader and enroll in her class. The names of the leaders will be published next week. If you would like to be a leader for your community attend this leader's meeting.

Resort Woman Dies

Word was received the first of the week by Don Campbell, telling of the death on Wednesday, April 7th, at Cincinnati, Ohio, of Mrs. Fannie Stix, a well known Charlevoix summer resorter. Mrs. Stix had occupied the Campbell cottage on Dixon avenue for the past twelve years and was well known by Charlevoix people.

NEW NORMAL IS STILL AN ISSUE

Special Meeting Called For April 27th to Take Further Action

The Northern Michigan normal school site, in which East Jordan and Petoskey are vitally interested, will be discussed at a joint meeting of the state board of education and the state administrative board at a special meeting on April 27th.

All normal problems of the state will be taken up, including the rebuilding of the Mt. Pleasant Normal and financing it. With the special session out of the way and the road funds matter more fully understood, it is expected that Governor Groesbeck will give his attention to the settlement of the location of the new normal. As the state board of education recommended Petoskey, it is believed its members will urge the governor to approve their selection, in order that work may be commenced during the spring.

ALL OUT OF SORTS?

So Was This Charlevoix Woman Who Tells Her Experience.

All too often women accept their pains and aches as natural to their sex. They fail to realize that weak kidneys are often to blame for that backache, those headaches, dizzy spells and that tired, depressed feeling. Thousands have found new health and strength by helping the weakened kidneys with Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic. This Charlevoix case is one of many:

Mrs. H. H. Fales, 110 Robinson St., says: "I had a dull ache through the small of my back and when I tried to do anything that required stooping, cutting pains darted across my kidneys. Then as time passed, my eyes were blurred with little specks. At first my kidneys were weak and then they became sluggish. Two boxes of Doan's Pills were all I needed to rid me of the trouble."

Quaker Oats "stands by" you through the morning

Important for Children and Grown-Ups Alike

HOW you feel all morning depends largely on what you eat for breakfast. Thousands have unenergetic forenoons because of wrong breakfast eating.

To feel right, you must have a well-balanced, complete breakfast ration. At most other meals—lunch and dinner—you get it. But breakfast is a hurried meal, often badly chosen.

Thus Quaker Oats, containing 16% protein—food's great tissue builder, 58% carbohydrate, its great energy element, plus all-important vitamines and the "bulk" that makes laxatives seldom needed, is the dietetic urge of the world today.

It is food that "stands by" you through the morning. Food that should start every breakfast in your home.

Quick Quaker cooks in 3 to 5 minutes. That's faster than plain toast. Don't deny yourself the natural stimulation this rich food offers you.

"My Own Pal" Brings Out Tom Mix in Brand New Stunt

"My Own Pal," adapted from an original story by Gerald Beaumont for Fox Films as a starring vehicle for Tom Mix comes to the Palace Theatre, April 24-25.

Tom in this story, according to advance reports, gives one of the finest and most thrilling performances of his career. For the character is that of a dare-devil and romantic Irishman who comes to the city looking for adventure—and finds plenty of it after he has managed to join the mounted police.

Peter Kyne Picture Coming to Standard

Some months ago over a million readers of the Cosmopolitan magazine were delighted by Peter B. Kyne's story, "Cornflower Cassie's Concert," the tale of a young, talented girl who got her big chance to make good on her glorious voice through the philanthropy of a California miner who was considered a bad man by the community.

Now these readers and many millions more are to have the pleasure of seeing this vivid story, for it has now been screened and is scheduled to come to the Palace Theatre, Tuesday and Wednesday, April 27-28.

PURCHASE GARAGE SITE IN PETOSKEY

Will Be Used as Branch Buick Service Station

A deal was completed on Tuesday of last week whereby the firm of Heaton & Hooper, of Boyne City, acquired the property of Cleo Harris on East Lake street, Petoskey, opposite Clark's Tavern and adjoining the VanGorder property.

Heaton & Hooper have the Buick agency for this section, and own and operate a service station and garage in Boyne City, and in the near future will place a man in charge of the service station which they will establish in that city.

It is the intention of the new owners eventually to erect a modern fireproof garage, possibly with three stories. The property has a frontage of 108 feet on Lake street and for a time was under option, together with other sites, to the promoters of the new hotel project.

Fine for catarrh when melted in a spoon or snuffed up the nose and vapors inhaled.

Head and Chest Colds Relieved In a New Way

A Salve which Releases Medicated Vapors when Applied Over Throat and Chest.

Inhaled as a vapor and, at the same time absorbed through the skin like a liniment, Vicks VapoRub reaches immediately inflamed, congested air passages.

This is the modern direct treatment for all cold troubles that is proving so popular in Canada and the States where over 17 million jars are now used yearly.

Splendid for sore throat, tonsilitis, bronchitis, croup, head and chest colds, catarrh, asthma or hay fever.

Just rub Vicks over throat and chest and inhale the medicated vapors. It quickly loosens up a cold.

tain the position. He was very dark and lean, with bare, corded limbs and a sinewy trunk covered by the remnants of a cotton shirt and trousers. His hair was a stringy black. His voice, when he spoke in answer to a sign from my great-uncle, was lordly rhythmical, but what he said I could not understand, for both he and Murray used Spanish.

My great-uncle asked two questions, both brief, and he answered us briefly. My great-uncle waved his hand again; he dug his steering-oar into the crest of one of the monstrous surges, and the little boat shot away like a round-shot from a gun. A few moments later we saw them make fast to the sloop and leap aboard, one by one. The sloop hauled her wind and beat off to westward in long, slanting tacks, and the James was once more alone in the western mouth of the Mona passage, Hispaniola a blur in the north and Porto Rico somewhere out of sight southeast of us.

Murray dusted a second pinch of snuff into his nostrils as he turned from the rail.

"Our three-weeks' waiting hath not been in vain," he said. "The Santissima Trinidad was to sail from Porto Bello within the forty-eight hours after Diego put forth. She will be up with us in another five days. The foods have delivered her into our hands. By her sailing orders, so Diego told me, she must hug the south shore of Hispaniola, that she may be within easy run of Santo Domingo in case of accident. As for the nights, she'll be lighted up like Bartholomew's fair.

"Ja, it's all right if dot Englishman we sighted last week don't find a frigate," said Peter.

Murray's face fell a trifle.

"Yes, we have always that to reckon with," he acknowledged. "Stap me, I see not what the fellow could have suspected to send him kiting from us."

"If he suspected us, why not some of the other craft that have passed us on our beat?" I interjected. "There ha' been plenty."

My great-uncle pointed to the white ensign flouting from the mizzen-truck.

"They were all Spaniards or Frenchmen," he answered. "They took us for a king's ship. No, there's little chance of interference. If there is—" his jaw squared—"I'll hunt the Santissima Trinidad into Cadiz port."

Nothing happened that day or the next. And so three more days passed with increasing tension. The look-outs in the crosstrees were relieved every two hours, that the men's vision might be fresh and unstrained. The sixth day was like its predecessors, blazing hot, building the pitch out of the deck-seams, a gentle sou'east breeze barely sufficient to keep the sails drawing. Daylight found us further to the south than we usually piled, since Murray feared the Spaniard might have missed his reckoning and shifted the designed course he was to follow.

Noon observation saw us returned to our customary station, and to guard against the possibility that the Santissima Trinidad had passed us in the heat haze whilst we were beating up from the south my great-uncle ran down the wind into the mouth of the passage for several glasses. We encountered a fishing-periagua then, and the Indians of its crew shouted back to Murray's question that no great ship had entered the passage that day. So back again we beat to windward the whole weary afternoon.

In the shadowy hour that precedes the dawn the ball came from the mast-head—

"Lights ho!"

"How do you make them?" Murray trumpeted.

"Red and yellow, over and under," answered the main crosstrees.

"Very good," replied my great-uncle. "Master Martin, pipe all hands to breakfast, and serve an extra ration of rum."

"Aye, aye, sir," sighed Martin. "And here's to luck, —— —— my eyes!"

The dawn came all at once, as if a magician had waved his wand. The red disk of the sun lifted over the horizon. And it was day. Westward, perhaps half a league, a great ship was wallowing toward us before the freshening wind. The coloring of her figurehead sparkled in the level rays which touched her dingy canvas and turned the sails to cloth-of-gold. The gaudy banner of Spain flapped with a splendid insolence in the pure light.

"She is heavy-laden," exclaimed my great-uncle, staring at her through his pressed glass.

"Heavy-armed, too," I added, pointing at the band of cannon along her sides.

"We'll make light of that," he answered. "But I shall have to pay somewhat for my Quixotic promise to you, Robert, to spare her crew. Ho, Coupeau, pass the word that the prize must not be pierced betwixt wind and water. I would bring down a spar or two at the beginning of the action, but concentrate your fire upon her decks."

"Ouai, m'sieu'."

"But what of O'Donnell and his daughter?" I exclaimed. "On a shot-swept deck!"

"Tut, tut, my boy! You concern yourself needlessly. 'Tis a risky business and cannot be otherwise. What part do you and Peter purpose to play in the action?"

I was about to answer hotly that we would have naught to do with piracy when Peter said—

"Maybe we better go aboardt der Spaniard und catch der little gal, ja."

"An excellent idea," returned my great-uncle, looking expectantly at me. "I shall lead the boarders myself, and in the confusion I may be hard put to it, single-handed, to direct the fighting and save the O'Donnells from injury. If you two—"

"We'll do it," I said ungraciously. Then I nodded to the white ensign at the main peak.

"Will you fight under false colors?"

"They are not false," he retorted with tightened lips. "We fight for England today."

"England and Flint and Long John Silver and Bill Bones and Martin and Coupeau and—"

"Myself? Perhaps. But if those you have named share in the rewards of victory 'tis that England may profit thereby and the Good Cause triumph. What doth it matter, if King James return to London?"

"What indeed?" I echoed sarcastically, yet impressed against my will by his deadly earnestness.

A white puff of smoke jetted from our fo'csle, and a crackling explosion smote our ears. Coupeau had fired the first shot from one of the chase guns, long eighteens, beautiful bronze pieces of prodigious range. Involuntarily we all focused our eyes upon the treasure ship, and a cheer from the gun-crews applauded the dapping rent that showed in the bulge of the Spaniard's foretops'l.

"Excellent!" murmured my great-uncle.

The Santissima Trinidad staggered for an instant like a man who has been struck unexpectedly by one he supposed to be a friend. Then she yawned to give us a full view of her colors; and as she yawned, broadening the target, Coupeau fired again. 'Twas a low shot, fired as the James dropped into the trough betwixt two waves, and all we could see of it was that apparently it plowed into the waist.

The Spaniard fired a gun to leeward and put over his helm, aiming to cross our bows and head up for Santo Domingo. Plainly he did not know what to make of the incident. To all appearances the Royal James was a king's ship. She showed the English naval ensign. So he evidently decided that hostilities must have broken out between the two countries, and in obedience to his sailing orders endeavored to avoid a fight and make for the nearest fortified Spanish port.

But the James sailed two feet to the treasure ship's one; and splendidly handled, we overhauled her within a gloss of the first shot. In the meantime Coupeau kept perking away at her, and as we came within range of our main battery her foretops'l mast crashed, covering her fo'csle with a tangle of top-hamper.

This was too much for her people, and she put up her helm, brought her entire battery to bear and let fly at us with all her starboard metal. 'Twas a poorly managed salvo, yet three or four round-shot swished across our decks, and an eighteen-pounder smashed a couple of men in jelly just for'ard of the poop.

Coupeau, working like a madman with his chase guns, was firing both together, laid on the same target, and now he succeeded in cutting down the foremast about twenty feet from the deck, sending the heavy spar and billowing canvas a-trembling after the fallen topmast. The bulk of the wreckage fell overside, dragging the Santissima Trinidad down by the head and forming a sea-anchor to hold her stationary.

My great-uncle smiled with grim satisfaction.

"Ho, Saunders!" he hailed the second mate, who was stationed amidships. "Rig grappling-irons on the larboard bulwarks. We'll round the Spaniard as he lies. Let go your broadside, Coupeau!"

The gunner ran to the open main-hatch and bellowed the order down to the gun-deck. The planks seemed to spring under our feet. A thunderous series of detonations shook the James' whole fabric. The smoke-clouds were first driven away, then thickened to an impalpable mist, and the acrid stench of saltpeter and brimstone was choking in the nostrils. I had a wavery glimpse of a vast gilded figurehead, a heap of torn canvas and rigging.

We headed up into the wind with much creaking of yards and slatting of sails, and I heard faintly a clatter of milling oaterles from the smoke-bank that masked the Santissima Trinidad. Almost at once our broadside roared again, the red flames from the gun-muzzles licking out like hungry tongues.

The Spaniard blindly returned our fire as the James felt her way toward him, the thunder of the two broadsides overpowering, numbing like the roaring of two beasts fighting in the night. I felt my great-uncle's hand on my arm; his voice was low, but distinct.

"We shall soon be broadside on with her," he said. "The O'Donnells will be on the poop. You had best get for'ard, Robert. If we board from abaft the foremast 'twill place you strategically to seize upon them. You and Peter had best carry arms. I fear the Spaniards will not seek to differentiate betwixt you and my wicked self."

"Ja," assented Peter. "We go."

Amidships we encountered Saunders and a horde of men pouring up from the gun-deck to augment the boarding-parties. Peter and I tarried to select weapons from a rack by the main mast. He took a boarding-pike, and I contented myself with a cutlass.

Murray, having inspected the grapplings and ascertained that hooks had been rigged from our yard-arms to clutch the Spaniard's rigging, rejoined us. He was dressed with his usual exquisite taste in watered gray silk, with white silk stockings and gray shoes with jeweled buckles. He wore no hat, and his white hair was clubbed and cued. The only weapon carried was a dress-sword, which he held unsheathed.

"An end to our immediate worries soon, Robert," he announced cheerfully. "The action has gone perfectly. I would not have varied a move so far. We have not lost a dozen men.

A final blast from our guns tore the smoke-clouds to shreds, and a vagrant wind-puff snatched them aside. 'Twas like the drawing of a curtain at a play. The treasure ship lurched helplessly not twenty fathoms distant, her rigging in tatters, her spars split and wounded, her fo'csle and foredeck one red litter, her bulwarks splintered, gunports blown in, guns dismounted.

The two ships jolted together, and in response to wind and helm the Royal James swung broadside on against the Spaniard, our bowsprit becoming entangled in her mizzen rigging. A dozen grappling-irons clattered in air and ground their hooks into her bulwarks. There was a brisk popping of small-arms, an exchange of threats and shouts of defiance.

Congregational Choir Repeats Cantata at East Jordan

The Congregational church choir added another musical triumph to its record for faithful and sueeessful work by the musical serviee given at the East Jordan Presbyterian church, with the aid of singers and instrumentalists of East Jordan, last Sunday evening. The cantata, "The Living Christ," by Wildermere, was repeated before an audience which taxed every available bit of space. Under Mrs. Stelter's accurate and inspiring direction, the twelve vocal numbers of the cantata and the two special orchestra numbers were rendered with fine interpretation and fullness of tone which held the audience in close and absorbed attention.

The chorus work was powerful in the crescendo parts and delicately shaded in the quieter places. Special numbers for solo, duet and trio were rendered by Miss Shaw, Mrs. Waggoner and Mr. Seiler of East Jordan, and by Mrs. Livingston, Mrs. Adams, Mrs. Mattson, Mrs. Milton Block, Dr. Wilkinson, Gilbert Saltonstall and Mr. Ogden of Charlevoix.

The Methodist church of East Jordan also participated in the service, the pastor, Rev. H. Hiles, giving the benediction at the close of the program.

A beautifully served luncheon was enjoyed in the church dining rooms by the performers and those who accompanied them from Charlevoix, before the return trip, and the whole occasion was pronounced by all as one of great value and enjoyment and worthy of being established as a regular custom from time to time during the year. It was a rather late hour when the final car in the procession of automobiles arrived safely at Charlevoix after the devious journey through frowning canyons of snow walls which lined much of the road. But all shared the enjoyable satisfaction of having helped in giving a worthy demonstration not only of the good fellowship between churches, but of the power of fine music to link in finest friendship the two beautiful communities, East Jordan and Charlevoix.

RATES REDUCED ON AUTO FERRY

Administrative Board in Meeting Wednesday at Lansing Approves

A downward revision of rates for automobiles and commercial vehicles on the ferry at Mackinaw, was authorized last Wednesday at a special meeting of the state administrative board with the officals of the highway department,

The new rates for passenger cars will vary from $2 to $3.50—the old rates ranged from $2.50 to $3.50. Commercial car rates will have a $3.00 to $9.00 variation—the old rate ran up to $15.00.

It is expected that the new and lower rates will produce but slightly less revenue than prevailing rates last year, on account of increase in traffic. The ferries produced a net profit last year, and it is the purpose of the highway department to transport the motorists at approximately cost.

The two ferries are being widened at a cost of $113,000 and it is possible that a third one will be purchased for use during the high peak of the summer.

BAPTIST CHURCH

With the coming of spring, every loyal Charlevoixan is trying to make his home a bit neater—just a little more attractive. This is good business. For what helps the community as a whole, helps the individual. The church should contribute its part in making "Charlevoix the Beautiful." We hope to greet a large congregation at all our services—Sunday morning at 10:30; Bible school at 12:00 m., B. Y. P. U. at 6:30 p. m., and preaching at 7:30.

We heard a man from one of the "boom towns" of the state, boast that their local prosperity had come largely because the men all went to church Sundays. We know of nothing that would contribute more. While looking after our houses, lawns, gardens and streets, let us give a little thought to our hearts and lives.

MRS. MOSES S. BOWDISH PASSED AWAY TUESDAY

Had Been a Resident of Charlevoix for 44 Years

Mrs. Moses S. Bowdish, who had been a resident of Charlevoix for the past 44 years, passed away at her home on West Hurlbut avenue, Tuesday afternoon, after an illness of considerable duration.

Annie E. Muxlow was born in Darlington, Wisconsin, October 10, 1859, and was 67 years old at the time of her death. She resided at Darlington until 13 years of age, moving from there with her parents onto a farm near Independence, Ia., in which vicinity she resided until she came to Charlevoix with some friends in the fall of 1882.

She was married October 31, 1883 to M. S. Bowdish of Charlevoix, and the couple lived here up until their deaths, Mr. Bowdish having passed away 12 years ago. To this union were born five children, three daughters and two sons, four of whom survive to mourn their loss, namely: Mrs. Ruth Beattie and Roy Bowdish of Charlevoix; Beulah, of Evanston, Ill., and Mrs. Neva Shaw of Traverse City. A son, Robert Nelson, is deceased. Besides the children, Mrs. Bowdish is survived by seven brothers and one sister. Deceased was a member of the Maccabee lodge and the local Baptist church, and was dearly loved by all who knew her.

Funeral services have not been arranged at this time, and arrangements will not be completed until the arrival of Beulah Bowdish from Evanston, Ill.

Monday, May 3rd, is the date when Dr. J. Leahy, the optometrist, will be at the Hotel Charlevoix. One day only.—Adv. 16-t2.

FORM LOCAL UNION IN NEAR FUTURE

"We'll Help to Safeguard America's Future" Slogan

The National Prohibition Guards is a Christian patriotic organization through which the Woman's Christian Temperance Union aims to enroll and train the children and young people to carry on the work for prohibition and law observance.

The guard slogan is "We'll Help to Safeguard America's Future," and every member of the guards enrolls under the following pledge:

"Because I believe it to be the patriotic duty of every American to obey the laws of the land, I hereby enroll in the Million Membership Campaign for Law Observance, promising to abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, and to obey the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States."

Rodger Babson, a specialist in facts and figures recently made the following statement in regard to the prohibition question:

"The solution of the problem lies in again renewing the campaign to educate the children and to warn them against the dangers of touching liquor. Not only is this the way to have law enforcement and to make prohibition effective but it is the only way to develop selfcontrol and real manhood and womanhood."

The local union will in the near future offer an opportunity for the Charlevoix boys and girls to enroll as guards.

Farmers, Attention

We are now contracting pickle acreage for the coming season. Several of our growers received better than $200 cash per acre last year, and pickles are a good spot-cash crop.

Many farmers have already written in for acreage and we have reserved contracts for them. As our acreage is limited, we urge you to call for your contract now at our dill pncking room in the old Cooperative building, or phone us, No. 25. Or, write in so we may reserve acreage for you before our contracts are all gone.

GLEE CLUB CONCERT WAS APPRECIATED

Large Crowd Hears Fine Program at Methodist Church

The Albion Glee Club, composed of twenty-five students, appeared last Friday night in the First Methodist Episcopal church. For two hours it entertained a large audience with a variety of numbers that included group harmony, special quartet selections, vocal and instrumental solos and a number by a string trio.

Clement B. Yinger of Greenville, drew rounds of applause with his interpretation of "European Guides," from Mark Twain's "Innocents Abroad." He responded to an encore with a very humorous selection.

The Club as whole displayed a remarkable technique. The selections by the various quartettes met with particular favor from the audience, as did the instrumental selections.

Following the closing number on the program, "Old Albion" was sung, and all Albion graduatea in the audience were invited to come to the platform and sing this final song. There were three former Albion men in the audience, including the pastor of the church, who is a graduate of the liberal arts department of the college. The Albion yell, "Io Triumphe," was given by the club, and a very pleasant evening of entertainment closed.

There was a reception tendered the Club by the Epworth League of the church after the musical program, at which light refreshments were served and a good time with games and stunts was enjoyed. This is the second time the Albion College Glee Club has appeared in this church, and the concensus of opinion is that it was the best musical treat they have rendered in this city. The glee club came under the auspices of the Ladies' Literary and Sewing Club of the church.

NEW PALACE THEATRE

ATTRACTIONS FOR THE COMING WEEK

Thursday and Friday, April 22 and 23

Clara Bow and Earl Williams in "THE ANCIENT MARINER." Samuel Taylor Coleridge's immortal poem transferred to the screen with all it's beauty. The slaying of the albatross and the many of the dramatic incidents of "The Ancient Mariner" vividly depicted. The screen drama that will never be forgotten.

Also a Fox Imperial Comedy, "Officers of the Day." This picture is for the benefit of the Charlevoix County Normal Class.

Saturday and Sunday, April 24 and 25

Tom Mix in "MY OWN PAL." It's the snappiest, zippiest, speediest thriller that Tom Mix ever made. A big star and a little girl in a new kind of story that every Tom Mix fan will love. A galloping ride to romance with thrills and spills on the way. You all know Tom.

Also a very god comedy, "Peace Maker," and another educational picture, "Light of a Race." Be sure and have the children see these educational pictures.

Tuesday and Wednesday, April 27 and 28

Forrest Stanley and Mabel Ballin in Peter B. Kyne's story play, "BEAUTY AND THE BAD MAN." It was Modoc Bill, miner and sporting gambler, considered a "Bad Man" in his own town and the neighboring career possible. What wonder then that she should idolize him —believe in him—love him.

Also a Fox News Reel. Travel the world with the News Reels. The very best form of travel.

What Happens In a Boom?

The owners of the spot where the boom hits usually sit and wait while outsiders swarm in and grab the goose, the golden eggs and all.

Then you hear the wail: "Why, I could have bought that very same property and made a fortune on it."

Look out, Charlevoix!

Be ready—have your share nailed down.

Charlevoix property will never again be as cheap as it is today.

PIONEER JEWELER OF PETOSKEY DEAD

End Came When Apparently Regaining Former Health

Will Z. Searle, known to hundreds of northern Michigan friends as "Little Will," passed away unexpectedly early Thursday morning last at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Martz, with whom he was staying.

He had been receiving treatment at Lockwood hospital until Wednesday morning and then was so much improved that he went to the Martz home, where his daughter was staying. He was up and around the house during the day and evening, and appeared to be in the best of health. Having retired early he evidently passed away in his sleep, the end coming peacefully with no hint of pain or physical discomfort.

—The passing of Mr. Searle closes an eventful life, during which he was closely identified with the growth and progress of Petoskey. He was one of the pioneer jewelers of northern Michigan, having establishing his Petoskey store in 1885. He was a member of the Masonic order of long standing also charter member of the Petoskey Rotary Club.

Funeral services were held from the M. E. church, Sunday at 3:00 p. m. the services jointly in charge of Ivanhoe Commandery and the Science church. The funeral was largely attended by friends from northern Michigan points.

AEROPLANE WRECKED IN ST. JAMES HARBOR

When asked about ice conditions, Donnellan said: "Old timers at the island advised me not to attempt the trip across. I fully realized the anxiety among you fellows in Charlevoix, and made up my mind I'd cross, even though I would have to make the trip alone. When I met the dog team it sure was some relief. We jumped cracks, climbed ice hills and had the roughest kind of going all the way back. I do not believe there is a chance for boat navigation for at least three weeks. Cross Villagers say there is more ice in the lake today than they have seen for 40 years, and after crossing it, I am inclined to believe them."

Questioned as to conditions on Beaver Island, he said: "The folks over there are short in food supplies including sugar, coffee, salt and other minor commodities as well as smoked meats." Continuing, he said: "They are a hospitable bunch over there, know how to make a fellow feel at home and did all they could to help me in my trouble."

Capt. Donnellan brought back affidavits signed by prominent Beaver Island residents and government employes wholly exonerating from blame for damage to the plane. The increased velocity of the wind was entirely unlooked for and under ordinary conditions the precautions taken would have held the plane in place.

Islanders Want Regular Service

Capt. Donnellan said the islanders are insistent on having a regular air plane service established between Charlevoix and St. James. They have pledges $6,000 to be used for the purchase of a sea plane and the formation of a permanent carrier company. The sea plane would be used not only in regular runs to the island, but for trnnsportation of mail, light merchandise, and a regular passengar service run. Their idea is to cover not only the island, but a regular service between Charlevoix, Traverse City, Manitou Island, Naubinway Cross Village and Mackinaw Island. The sea plane would be used during the summer time and a land plane during the winter. Donnellnn stands ready to put money in the scheme, and firmly believes it will prove a paying venture, besides an attractive drawing card for all points included on the route.

"The fellows who have had the winter mail contract are sick of the job. The danger of crossing the ice by team or dogs is a risk few men will take. At times they are out for days, sometimes caught in blizzards they wander about for hours before they get their bearings. An established air mail service is the safest way to handle the business," said the captain.

According to Donnellan, it is doubiful if the Air Transit Co., owners of the wrecked plane, to whom the recent air mail contract was awarded, will complete the six run schedule. If a carrier company can he quickly organized, it will be able to handle the business. Until further developments, the island may be without service until lake navigation is open, unless by the ice route from Cross Village.

Council Chambers, April 20, '26

At an adjourned meeting of the common council of the city of Charlevoix held on the above date, Mayor Bergeon, aldermen present, Bridge, Eckinger, Geiken, Howe, Partridge.

Alderman Partridge offered the following resolution and moved its adoption, seconded by Ald. Geiken.

Resolved by the common council of the City of Charlevoix, that,

Whereas, due hearing, upon notice, having been had before the council in the matter of the proposed construction of a sewer in that part of West Hurlbut avenue, in said city, lying between the center line of State street and the west line of Lot 94 of Upright and Hurlbut addition to said city, and no persons having appeared in opposition to the construction of such sewer and there being no objections or suggestions in relation thereto, and the matter having been fully considered, therefor,

Be it Resolved that the construction of a sewer in a portion of said street as described, namely, in that part of said West Hurlbut avenue lying between the center line of State street and a point twenty feet west of the East line of lot 75 of Upright and Hurlbut addition to said city, be and hereby is declared a necessary public improvement, and that the construction of a sewer in the remaining portion of the street described be, and hereby is deferred to the further consideration of the council.

Resolved further, that the estimate of the cost of construction of such sewer, namely, from the center line of State street to a point twenty feet west of the east line of said Lot 75, be and hereby is amended, to read in the sum of Six Hundred Thirty-six dollars, the same including the cost of surveys, legal advertising, and inspection.

Resolved further, that the cost of construction according to such amended estimate of cost, be borne and defrayed as follows:

First: That one-sixth of such cost, namely the sum of One Hundred Six dollars be borne and paid out of the general sewer fund of said city.

Second: That five-sixth of such cost, namely, the sum of Five Hundred Thirty dollars, be borne and paid by special assessment on the lands and premises included in the district to such benefits to each parcel of said lands so benefited, as provided by law.

Resolved further, that the Board of Special Assessors of said city, be and hereby are instructed to make and spread a special assessment of said last named sum of Five Hundred Thirty dollars upon the lots, parts of lots, lands and premises included in said district as hereinafter described, according to benefits, as provided by law, and that said Board meet in the council rooms in said city on the 22nd day of April A. D. 1926, at nine o'clock in the forenoon for the purpose of making such assessment and continue such meeting until said assessment is completed, and thereupon to forthwith file the same with the city clerk.

Resolved further, that the district to be benefited by the construction of said sewer be designated and known as West Hurlbut avenue sewer—Eastern Section, and that said district shall be comprised of the following described lands:

The south half of lots 75, 76, 77, 78, and the west 48 1-2 feet of lot 80, and lots 82, 83 and 84, all in Upright and Hurlbut's addition to said city of Charlevoix.

Resolved further, that the city

for Sturdier Structures

To provide a safe haven for your loved ones during the stress of wind and storm, as well as in fair weather, build with Native Hemlock for these essential reasons:

1—Oversized studding, rafters and joists—8% to 16⅔% more wood to the piece—greater structural strength.
2—Grips nails like a vise—heat or frost can't draw them—holds your building rigid against wind strain.
3—Free from dry-rot—assures longer life for your buildings.
4—Contains no pitch—Hemlock lath won't stain plaster and is more fire resistant.
5—Easy to work—don't gum the carpenter's saw—speeds up construction and lowers building costs.
6—Takes all paints and stains perfectly.
7—And—it's Grade-marked with Licensed Association Brand and Grade plainly stamped on each piece at the mill insuring responsible manufacture and guaranteed grades.

No other structural wood combines all seven of these important and practical advantages. With good lumber like this plentiful, why use questionable substitutes?

A Record Made a Verdict Rendered

Here is a record to make you pause:

70,599 Dodge Brothers Motor Cars and Graham Brothers Trucks sold in the United States from January 2nd to April 3rd, 1926!

The greatest quarter in the company's history.

37 per cent greater than the same period last year, when 51,318 units were sold.

This record was a foregone conclusion. Since the first of the year demand increased week by week. Each period showed greater sales than the one preceding and greater than the same period of 1925.

During the last week recorded, ending April 3rd, 9104 units were sold, against 6530 for the best week last year—a gain of 39 per cent.

Sales figures are an index to the buyer's preference.

Buyer's preference, these days, springs from clean-cut convictions on quality and comparative worth, penny for penny.

Although the peak of the selling season has not yet been reached, the verdict has already been rendered.

Details of Goddard-Nicholls Wedding of March 18

Until the recent return of Mrs. Nellie P. Wood, Charlevoix has had only a few details of the marriage of Mrs. Mabel Nicholls, Mrs. Wood's daughter. But now the scores of friends who have been so interested will be glad to hear the news at greater length.

An extract from The Topic, of Mount Dora, Florida, dated March 18, tells us this much:

"The guests of the Villa Dora were very much surprised last Thursday evening when the marriage of Mrs. Mabel Nicholls of Charlevoix, Michigan, to Albert Goddard of Lincoln, N. H., was announced.

"The happy couple, who became acquainted while spending the winter at the Villa Dora, left the hotel Thursday morning, were married in Leesburg and immediately left on the trip North to Lincoln, N. H., where Mr. Goddard has extensive business interests.

"Mrs. Nicholls is well known throughout the town having relatives that make their winter home in Mt. Dora and countless friends. Mr. Goddard is connected with the Mountain Lake Development Company, and is in the hotel business in Lincoln, N. H.

"Their many friends and acquaintances extend to them their best wishes for happiness."

The tour from Mount Dora to Lincoln, N. H., was made by automobile. Charlevoix rejoices with its old friend in the new happiness and the bright future her letters so glowingly foretell.

Upon the completion of various business matters in Charlevoix, Mrs. Wood will join her daughter and her new son in Lincoln. We will not believe she can quit Charlevoix for good—and we hope she cannot.

WILL RETURN TO HIS OLD HOME TOWN

Mr. and Mrs. Harker Kirby Soon to Arrive in City

Charlevoix people are always interested in the welfare of former residents, especially so when they return to their home town after an absence of several years. Mr. and Mrs. Harker Kirby were former Charlevoix residents. They left here some ten years ago. For the past three years they have lived at Beverly farms, Mass. Commenting on their departure from there, the local newspaper of that city comments as follows:

"A pleasant surprise party was tendered to Mr. and Mrs. Harker Kirby and their two sons at the Beverly Farms Baptist chapel on Saturday evening by a number of their church friends in appreciation of the services rendered by Mr. and Mrs. Kirby in the various musical activities of the church. They are to move to Charlevoix, Mich., on April 19th, their home town. Mr. and Mrs. Kirby came to the chapel expecting to participate in the weekly choir rehearsal, but instead found an orchestra and a large number of friends awaiting them. * * * Mrs. Kirby was presented with a handsome boquet of roses and Mr. Kirby with a purse of gold.* * * A reception followed the presentations and refreshments."

Mr. Kirby, wife and sons are enroute to Charlevoix. They are now visiting friends in Detroit and expect to arrive in Charlevoix within ten days.

Don't forget the good supper the ladies of the M. E. church will serve Wednesday, April 28, from 5:30 until all are served. Price 50c.—Adv. 16-t1.

CHURCH OF GOD
Wm. Eldridge, Pastor

The usual services are to be held at the chapel, April 25th. The pastor will preach his farewell sermon at 10:30.

If we were to be here until May 13, five full years would have been spent at this place. Beside the excellent climatic conditions, "The City on Three Lakes" have been a most enjoyable place to live. We have been engaged in church work in five different states, but for friendliness, kindliness, courtesy and general good will Charlevoix has never been exceeded by any place we have been in.

The many appreciative words spoken to us in the last few days make it harder for us to leave, but also make us glad that we are able to leave the people feeling this way.

We feel like extending our thanks to the general public of this vicinity for the help and comfort that they have extended to us so heartily during our stay. The people of Charlevoix are certainly not hard to please.

The Ladies Aid of the M. E. church will hold an all day baked goods sale and warm sugar luncheon in the building occupied by Nell's Cafe, 1st door north of Hotel Charlevoix, on Saturday, April 24.—Adv. 16t1.

Farmers and Poultry Raisers, Attention

The time is at hand when farmers are preparing for the production of food crops which are so necessary to feed the world. No other line of agricultural activity is more important than the Poultry industry. Biddy will soon want to set and many farmers will be raising chicks for layers and table fowls. Don't forget how important to set eggs from well bred stock, as eggs are bred into the hen and fed out. It might be possible to have well bred fowls and get no eggs, but it is impossible to get many eggs from poorly bred fowls.

We have White Wyandottes which not only do not fail to fill the egg basket, but also do not fail to win in the Show Room and laying contests. Come and see our ribbons. They are also ideal table fowls and contented when confined in a 5 ft. enclosure.

Our large pen of White Leghorns are bred up for heavy production and large white eggs. They are headed by two male birds direct from the Rockwood, Ont., pens and four cockerals, being their sons. If you should see them you would pronounce them a very beautiful pen.

White Pekin Ducks, carefully selected for two years. This breed is the only one in demand on this market. They are beautiful, especially after a rain, and furnish a pleasing and appetizing fowl for a big dinner.

If you would like to set some eggs from this good stock, give us your order at once. The prices are reasonable:

White Wyandottes $1 per 15 Eggs
White Leghorns. . . . $1 per 15 Eggs
(Special prices on large lot for incubators)
White Pekin Ducks $1 per 13 Eggs

If buying, by all means see what you are buying from.

You are Invited!

to visit our farm, see the pretty birds and hear the music. If you are not interested in Poultry, this trip will inspire you for the time being at least, with some enthusiasm as you might hear the White Wyandotte duet, and the chorus of 100 soprano voices issuing from the 100 nests of the Leghorns to the accompaniment of tenor and bass of the White Pekins and the occasional ringing in of the younger set and the creseendos of Turkey Tom.

If you think you would not care for this kind of music bring your children out to see the fluffy little ducklings and cute little baby chicks.

We are glad to welcome and entertain visitors any time (except Sundays) and answer any questions you might ask, providing they do not go deeper than our source of information which includes a course of instruction with the America Poultry School and the lessons and lectures from the government men who visit us regularly to give instructions and demonstrations, as our place is now under government supervision.

TOTAL COST OF CONCRETE ROADS

COVERS PAVEMENT NORTH AND SOUTH OF CHARLEVOIX

Road Commissioner Byers Has Statement Prepared Covering Mucb Discussed Topic

For two years or more The Courier has heard the following remark: "What was done with our share of the $350.000.00 in road bonds voted on and since issued; the total amount being split four ways, Charlevoix getting $100,000.00, Boyne City $100,000.00, East Jordan $100,000.00 and Boyne Falls $50,000.00."

No one seemed to know. Some even went so far as to openly state Charlevoix did not get all of her share. Others hinted that a part of Charlevoix's share was spent on road construction in other sections of the county. And so the story traveled until much garbled and unfounded rumors passed from mouth to mouth. Men who should know the facts were unable to make an intelligent statement of how or where the money was spent. Members of the county road commission were being severely criticized, and unjustly, too.

Several weeks ago the Courier asked Commissioner W. E. Byers for an itemized statement of all receipts and expenditures on the 5.7 miles of concrete road north of Charlevoix, also on the 6.8 miles of concrete on M-11 south of Charlevoix. We also requested him to includa in this report all monies received from state, county or federal aid. At Mr. Byer's request, Ernest Peaslee, bookkeeper of the county road commission, searched the records carefully and the following report is the result of his findings:

Cost of construction of 5.7 miles of concrete road from Greensky Hill, to Bay Shore, known as Federal Aid Road No. 27, and how the same was paid.

Total cost of construction	$154.794.19
Paid as follows:
Federal and state aid	$ 94,882.78
By the county	59;911.41
	$154,794.10

The County's share ns indieated above was $59,911.41 which was paid as follows:

Snle of F. A. road bonds	$ 59.236.12
Premium on cancelled bonds	366.53
Tax levy (county rond)	308.76
	$ 59,911.41

Cost of 6.8 miles of concrete road south of Charlevoix on M-11 and known ns Federal Aid Road, No. 71, and how the same was paid:

Total cost of construction	$217,108.41
Paid as follows:
Federal and state aid	$175,185.20
By the county	41,923.21
	$217,108.41

The county's share as indicated, was $41,923.21 and was paid as follows:

Sale of federal aid road bonds	$ 40,763.88
Unpaid	1,159.33
	$ 41,923.21

Summary of Federal Aid Road Bond Money used on the two roads, Federal Aid No. 27 and 71-.

Federal aid road No. 27..	$ 59,236.12
Federal aid road No. 71..	40,763.88
Total	$100,000.00

The above statements show the total cost of 12.5 miles of concrete road on M-11 in Charlevoix County to be as follows:

5.7 miles of federal aid No. 27 north of Charlevoix	$154,794.19
6.8 miles of federal aid No. 71 south of Charlevoix	217,108.41
Total 12.5 miles of federul aid road (all concrete)	$371,902.60

Average cost per milo was $29,752.20.

By combining the county's sharo of the above two pieces of road we have the following:

County's share of federal aid No. 27	$ 59,911.41

YOU MENTION BUT A FEW BRO. EDITOR

Editor Al. Weber of the Cheboygan Democrat, handed Charlevoix a nice complimentary notica last week. He mentions a few of Charlevoix's pending improvements. He also says our bread and butter depends on our crop of summer people. Guess he's right, too. We have been entertaining quite a crowd, Al. for a number of seasons, but we have plenty of room and accommodations, for more, and from present indications, we will have a full house during 1926. Here is what Mr. Weber said about us:

"Charlevoix proposes to stop dumping its sewage into Round Lake and the channel connecting the lake with Lake Michigan and will erect a sewage disposal plant. It will also provide a number of large docks around Round Lake for the accommodation of visiting yntchmen and boatmen generally. Also a boat club with a considerable membership has just been organized there. All of these tend to the proper encouragement and entertainment of the summer visitors. Their bread and butter depends upon these people, and they have long been able to spread their butter thick on both sides of their bread if they wished. Charlevoix is unquestionably a beautiful resort town with many rich and pretty summer homes, and the value of the summer guest has long been appreciated."

SPRING HIGHWAY WORK OUTLINED

STATE AND COUNTY TO HAVE BUSY SEASON

Nearly $21,000 Available for Trunk Line Maintenance and $50,000 for County Work

With the season near ut hand when it will again he possible to start work on road construction and repairs, plans are being laid by both state and county highway authorities so that everything will be in readiness when that time comes.

The amounts appropriated and the specifications for the work to be done on the trunk lines have been received from the state highway department, the total alloted to this work amounting to approximately $21,000. A total of around $70,000 will be spent on road work in Charlevoix county this season, of which $22,500 will be used for construction on county roads, $27,500 for maintenance of county roads and $21,000 appropriated by the state for maintenance of trunk lines, which will be spent as follows:

11-1, from end of concrete south of Charlevoix to Eastport, 8.3 miles, $10,010. This entire stretch, 6 1-2 miles of which is in Antrim county, will be resurfaced.

11-2 concrete south of Charlevoix, a stretch of 6.8 miles, $395.00.

11-3, from concrete south of Charlevoix to concrete north of Charlevoix, $1900, plans calling for one mile of this to be resurfaced.

11-4, concrete north of Charlevoix through Bay Shore, 6.5 miles, $445.00.

13-5, from the intersection of M-57 south of Clarion south to the county line, 11 miles, $4,290.00.

57-6, from Boyne Falls to Boyne City, 6.2 miles, $1,660, one mile of this distance to be resurfaced.

57-7, from Boyne City through Walloon Lake to M-13, 7.5 miles, $1,710.00.

All of this work, although paid by the state, will be done, under contract, by the county, in addition to a program of considerable proportion covering various county rouds. Charlevoix county has $22,500 for new construction, which will he expended as follow:

$8,500 for construction of approximately 1 1-4 miles of gravel on the Marion Center road. It is hoped by the commission to complete this job as far as the Phelps corner this year.

$2,000 for construction of approximately 1 mile on County Line road No. 1.

$5,000 for construction of 1 mile on Boyne Falls East road.

$6,000 for construction of approximately one mile on Ironton South road, or, probably better known as the lower road to East Jordan.

$1,000 for construction of 1 mile on Kings Highway, St. James township, Beaver Island.

In addition to this work as outlined above, a short stretch on tha Wilson road which was graded last year will bo graveled, as will a similar piece on the Horton Bay North road.

POTATO CONTRACTS VALID

SUCH IS DECISION OF BIG RAPIDS JUDGE

Association Member Who Violates Contract Subject to Penalty According to Decision

Judge Joseph Barton of Big Rapids, holds that the contracts of the Michigan Potato Growers' Exchange and its locals, with their growers, are valid and enforcement agreements. The Michigan Potato Growers' Exchange is a co-operative, non-profit corporation, having a membership of about seventy-five local associations, all of whom are co-operative associations incorporated.

The member local association have contracts with the growers of potatoes within their market area, whereby the grower appoints the local and the Exchange his sole and exclusive agent in the sale of any and all potatoes grown by him for sale. Section 15 of the grower's contract provides: "That the grower who fails or refuses to deliver his potatoes to the association in accordance with this contract shall pay to the Association the sum of twenty-five cents for each one hundred weight of potatoes sold by him to or through parties other than the association as liquidated damages." The contract also providing, that the delivery of the potatoes is contemplated rather than the collection of the penalty.

The exchange and locals have had considerable annoyanee by independent buyers of potatoes, soliciting their members to violate their contracts, and in a few instances have succeeded by misrepresentations and otherwise to procure the potatoes of a disloyal member upon the assertion that such contracts were invalid, and that the independent buyer would stand good for any loss, such defaulting member would sustain.

Recently one Ed Greiner, a member of the Hart Potato Growers' Associntion had sold nnd delivered certain of his potatoes outside the association, and one C. M. Hammerle, another member was threatening to do likewise, whereupon the nssociation, through the Michigan Potato Growers' Exchange, brought suit in the circuit court for Oscenna county, ngainst Mr. Greiner to collect the damages specified in the contract, and procured from Judge Barton a temporary injunction restraining Mr. Hammerle from selling or disposing of his potatoes to persons other than the association. These defendunts appeared by local and outside counsel, alleging that said contracts were for various reasons invalid, and the defendant in the injunction suit petitioned the court to dissolve same. Theso matters came up before Judge Barton on April 5th whereupon the facts in question were agreed upon, and Judge Barton set April 19, 1926, for the hearing of oral arguments on the matter. At the conclusion of the arguments, Judge Bartoa promptly held these contracts valid in every particular, rendering a judgment against Mr. Greiner at 25c per hundred weight for all potatoes sold outside the association with costs of the suit, and continuing the injunction against Mr. Hammerle restraining him from selling potatoes outside the association.

The effect of Judge Barton's ruling is that any member who threatens to sell outside the association may be restrained by an injunction from doing so, and for the potatoes sold by the member, before the issuance of an injunction, the association can collect the sum of 25c per hundred weight therefor; also that a member cannot by merely puying the 25c per hundred weight sell his potatoes to whomsoever he pleases.

The cases decided by Judge Barton last week ought to settle the contentions, and abate the annoyance and disturbance heretofore caused by independent buyers of potatoes within the market area of the exchange and its members.

WORK COMMENCED ON PACKING HOUSE

D. J. Eckinger To Enter Wholesale Fish Game Again

Work was started the first of this week on the building which will house the Eckinger Fish Company, of which D. J. Eckinger will be owner and manager.

The packing house and office will be 30x18 feet, located on Mr. Eckinger's property on the south shore of Round lake, between the Brady Boat Company and the Cooley boat house. A new dock was constructed last fall and with his new building completed Mr. Eckinger will be ready to start business.

LATEST ABOUT LEGAL FISHING

SPORTSMEN SHOULD BE CAREFUL ABOUT CLOSED STREAMS

Orders of Conservation Department Both as to Bass and Trout Should Be Kept

A letter from the state conservation department promises the complete fishing laws of the state with orders of the conservation department regulating fishing, which are being issued in pamphlet form and will be sent out soon. As soon as received a summary of these laws will be published in the Courier.

But meanwhile we are able to state on the authority of the state deprrtment that "all fishing is prohibited in the inland lakes of the state south of Town 20 North except those lakes directly connected with the Great Lakes from April 1 to June 15, inclusive, and fishing is permitted in the rivers nnd streams of the territory designated by hook and line only.

Under an order npproved by the Conservation Commissinn on September 21, all of the rivers and streams of the state are closed to trout fishing excepting those designated as open streams.

Following are the streams in Charlevoix and Antrim counties designated as open to fishing:

Charlevoix County

Hortons Creek; Monroe Creek; McGeagh; Inwood Creek; north branch of Boyne river to West line of Hudson township; south branch of Boyne river to crossing of State highway M-13 in Warner township; Spring Brook and north and south branches of same from Bear river to road running south from Cooks crossings; Warner and Collins creeks from Boyne Valley-Wilson township line roads to where they empty into Deer creek; Deer creek; Jordan river; West branch of Sturgeon river from Hoffman lake to Otsego county linc; Porter creek.

Antrim County

Cedar river from its mouth to line between sections 31 and 32, T 30 N, R 6W; Green river, as it runs through Chestonia township; Jordan river from north line of Antrim county to west line of Sec. 28 T 31 N, R 5 W; Cold creek in Custer township; Intermediate river as it runs through Echo, Banks, Central Lake and Forest Home townships; Orr creek in Banks Twp.; Torch river; Elk river.

All rivers, lakes and streams in the lower peninsula are closed to bass fishing until June 16. In the upper peninsula the opening date has been advanced to July 1. This includes both large mouth and small mouth black bass. It is thoaght by many that because of tho lateness of the season, June 15 will be too early for the opening of the bass season in the lower peninsula, as the bass will not be through spawning unless the ice leaves the lakes pretty soon.

DATES BACK TO ANCIENT TIMES

MOTHER'S DAY IS AN ANCIENT INSTITUTION

Received Official Recognition in Both Houses of Congress on May 10, 1913

Though the formal designation of a specific duy as Mother's Day was but recently made in this country, the custom of displaying filial veneration dates back to ancient times. It antedates the Christian era, had its rites and ceremonies in pagan days, and strikes deep into primitive emotions. The particular ceremonies attendant upon the honoring of motherhood have changed with changing times and the modern Mother's Day is observed in a manner which differs to a considerable extent from the ritual of olden days.

Authorities state that the earliest record of formal mother-worship lies in the tules of the ceremonies by which Rhea, "the Grent Mother of the Gods" was worshiped in Asia Minor. In this worship it was not so much the tender maternal aspect which claimed attention as the power and majesty of motherhood. Rhea was represented as traversing the mountains in a chariot drawn by lions and the ceremonies in her honor were marked by wild dances and wilder music. The lion, the oak, and the pine were sacred to her.

The worship of Rhea was introduced into Rome through Grecco about two hundred fifty years before Christ. There it was held on the Ides of March, when the people made offerings in the temple, and was known as the festival of Hilaria. These offerings in the temple served to elevate motherhood into something of the dignity which rightfully characterizes it.

With the advent of the Christian era, the festival still retained its old forms but became infused with a new spirit. From the celebration with pagan rites in honor of Rhea there developed an observance in honor of the Mother church. In this celebration it became the custom on Mid-Lent Sunday for the faithful to visit the churches in which they were baptized, bearing gifts for the altar.

From this festival of worship in honor of the Mother church there grew the observance of Mothering Sunday, though the successive steps in this development are not clear. It is certain, however, that long ago when young men and maidens were bound out as apprentices and as servants, Mid-Lent Sunday was set aside for them to visit their mothers, taking for them some little present such as a cake or trinket. A youth engaged in such a pilgrimage was said to go-mothering from which the day came to be called Mothering Sunday. The old bonds of filial love were brightened by this pleasant annual visit marked, as custom dictated, by the excitement attendant upon some novel und perhaps surprising gift. There was also a cheering and peculiar festivity appropriate to the day the chief dish being furmety, consisting of wheat grains boiled in sweet milk and sugared and spiced. Another delicacy much esteemed on Mothering Sunday was a simnel cake which was popular especially in Shropshire, Yorkshire, and Hereforshire. Tho inside of a simnel cuke was like a

WHY KID THE MAYOR? HE HAS HIS HOBBIES

The Cheboygan Democrat in its recent issue, quotes from an article in the Boyne Citizen, in which the editor of the Citizens tells of the qualifications of the mayor-elect of East Jordan. Then he makes a few suggestions and hands a left-hander to his own city officials. Why kid the mayor? Here's his dope:

"Tho Boyne Citizen in telling of tho qualifications of the new mayor-elect of East Jordan, says "Ho plays tennis and golf and has a beautiful baritone voice." Surely our neighbors will feel proud of their selection. Perbaps tha sessions of the common council will open with baritone solos hereafter. Maybe tennis and golf and a few hymns would not be a bad oxample on our own city governing body."

Quaker Oats "stands by" you through the morning

That's why millions start their days in this way

TO feel right through the morning, you must have well-balanced, complete food at breakfast. At most other meals—that is, at luncheon and at dinner—you usually get that kind of food.

But at breakfast the great dietary mistake is most often made—a hurried meal, often badly chosen.

Thus Quaker Oats, containing 16% protein, food's great tissue builder; 58% carbohydrate, its great energy element, plus all-important vitamines and the "bulk" that makes laxatives seldom needed, is the dietetic urge of the world today.

It is food that "stands by" you through the morning. Food that should start every breakfast in your home.

Quick Quaker cooks in 3 to 5 minutes. That's faster than plain toast. Don't deny yourself the natural stimulation this rich food offers.

AT THE MOVIES

"One Year to Live"

What would you do if you had but one year to live?

The question is asked you in the new First National picture, "One Year to Live," which comes to the Palace Theatre, Saturday and Sunday, May 1 and 2.

And the movie obligingly answers, indirectly, by vividly depicting the plight of a beautiful girl whose physician tells her she has but one year to live.

It is a sensational theme, and is reported by pre-view critics to have been well carried out by an elaborate cast which includes Aileen Pringle, Antonio Moreno, Dorothy Mackaill and other favorites.

Valentino in "Cobra"

When Rudolph Valentino settled down to work in Hollywood on "Cobra," his first independent Ritz production, the star lived in the house which he owned before his departure to New York two years ago. It is on a high hill overlooking the city.

"Cobra" shown at the Palace Theatre, Tuesday and Wednesday, May 4 and 5, was directed by Joseph Henabery, who made "A Sainted Devil" with the star, from Anthony Coldewey's adaptation of the broadway stage play of the same name by Martin Brown and as produced by Lawrence Weber.

Nita Naldi, Gertrude Olmsted, Casson Ferguson and others just as well known are included in the strong supporting cast. "Cobra" is a modern love story of great love and sacrifice. The scenes are laid in New York. A "flashback" gives picture fans a view of the famous Valentino beard.

My great-uncle, regardless of the firing, mounted the breach of a cannon which elevated him above the bulwarks, and Peter and I climbed into the forerigging, whence we had a fair view of both decks. The larboard bulwarks of the Royal James were crowded with men. Stripped to the waist, their lowering faces smutted with powder-stains, their hairy chests lopred with tattooing, their backs more often than not scarred by the cruel welts of the lash, they tussled for first place and clung with their bare toes wherever there was a bit of running gear or an inch of spare, gripping cutlasses in their teeth to leave hands free for pistol work or to steady themselves as they waited an opportunity to leap the narrowing gap between the vessels.

My eyes strayed to the Spaniard's decks. Little knots of men ran about confusedly. A stolid-looking fellow aimed a pistol at me and a ratline over my head fell apart. Officers were driving the sailors forward to meet us. A man in a laced coat and periwig was shouting orders from the poop, and my pulse quickened, for at his shoulder was the lantern-jawed face of Colonel O'Donnell—aye, and in the rear of both a skirt fluttered in the midst of a huddle of raven-black figures, priests and nuns.

"Jump!" squeaked Peter in my ear.

We jumped together, but my great-uncle was ahead of us. He leaped all of ten feet, sword in hand, alighted on the Spaniard's bulwarks, poised himself a moment and dropped into the center of a ring of foes. Before he had recovered his balance he had parried the slash of a cutlass and pinked an antagonist in the throat. And he beat down a leveled pistol as I gained the treasure ship's deck, inclined his head to avoid a murderous blow, ran the man through and almost in the same breath stepped a pace to the right to engage a fourth opponent—and all this with the cool precision of a fencing-master, unhurried, a flash of obvious enjoyment on his pallid cheeks.

But I saw no more. My task was to fight my way aft and protect the O'Donnells' and Peter and I turned our backs upon the struggle amidships. One wave of the pirates stormed in Murray's wake; the rest followed Peter and me. They were as brave as they were vicious, and we made rapid progress and were nearly at the foot of the poop-ladder when Murray's whistle shrilled behind us. I realized, too, that both O'Donnell and the officer in the laced coat were shouting volubly, the one in English and the other in Spanish, trying to make themselves heard above the din.

"—asks parley," came in broken phrases from O'Donnell. "—cannot understand—regrettable mistake—"

"Der Spaniard wants quarter," grunted Peter.

Indeed, those of the Santissima Trinidad's men who had been resisting us promptly flung down their arms, glad of the excuse to quit the fight; but the wolves of the James' crew were not schooled to show mercy, and they killed three poor fellows before Peter and I could knock up their cutlasses.

Murray's whistle blew a second time. There was a sudden hush, punctuated by the grinding of the two vessels, the thudding of unshod feet as more of the James' pirates dropped aboard the treasure ship, the gagging cries of the wounded, the nasal sing-song of a priest pattering Latin prayers.

I seized the opportunity to look around. We were too close under the poop to see what went on beyond the rail directly overhead; but the main-deck, fore and aft, was a pitiful spectacle—cluttered with wreckage and dead men and bits of men and women wounded in every conceivable fashion. Its yellow-sand carpet gemmed with carmine pools and rivulets.

My great-uncle, as immaculate as when he had ascended the James' bulwarks, stood a little ahead of the mass of his followers, his serene face and rich clothing in startling contrast with their nakedness and frank brutality. A trickle of blood dripped from the point of his slender sword. His attitude was that of an honorable man who wishes to be reasonable in a difficult situation.

"I believe I heard an appeal for quarter," he said quietly.

"Sir, you did," replied O'Donnell. "I have spoken for the gentleman beside me, Senor Don Ascanio de Hurtado y Costa, who is captain of this vessel."

"I am honored, sir," returned my great-uncle. "And yourself?"

O'Donnell did not altogether relish the playing of his part. He bit his lip and hesitated an instant before he answered.

"I am Colonel O'Donnell, an officer in the service of his Most Catholic Majesty."

"Ah; and what can I do for you, gentlemen?" inquired my great-uncle.

O'Donnell hesitated again and conferred with the Spanish officer.

"Sir," he said then, "Don Ascanio asks you by me: Since when have your country and Spain been at war?"

"To the best of my knowledge, they are not at this present," my great-uncle answered blandly.

"Then to what cause must we attribute this—this—ah— unwarrantable attack?" demanded O'Donnell.

"I am afraid," replied my great-uncle almost with sorrow, "that I am unable to satisfy your curiosity upon that point."

The Spaniard burst into a declaration of passionate intensity, which Murray interrupted.

"I am so fortunate as to comprehend the noble Spanish tongue," he said. "Would you be so kind, Colonel O'Donnell, as to acquaint your friend with the fact, and to assure him that I regret he must accept the situation as it stands? I am desirous of sparing the lives of those of his people who survive, but at a pinch I will slay them all to compass my intention."

"And what is that?" asked O'Donnell.

"To relieve Don Ascanio of the consignment of treasure he carries," answered my great-uncle. "When it is aboard my ship he shall be at liberty to continue his voyage."

O'Donnell proceeded haltingly to translate this statement. He never finished it. The Spaniard launched a fresh torrent of curses, broke his sword across his knee and tossed the pieces overside. My great-uncle nodded sympathetically.

"'Tis an unpleasant plight, I know," he said. "Had Don Ascanio not discarded his sword I should have been delighted to yield him an opportunity for such satisfaction as one gentleman may give another.

"However—I must stipulate further, Colonel O'Donnell, that the crew of the Santissima Trinidad shall be placed in confinement for so long as suits my purpose. Any resistance must cause additional bloodshed, which, I am sure, you will agree is unnecessary."

"Don Ascanio will say no more," returned O'Donnell. "He washes his hands of the whole proceeding. Abandoned by his crew—"

"Enough," interrupted my great-uncle.

He rattled off a sentence in Spanish, and there was an answering rattle of arms thrown on the deck. He spoke again, and the Santissima Trinidad's men all shifted to starboard and marched into the fo'csle, herded by a bristle of pirate cutlasses.

Murray walked aft to where Peter and I stood, uncertain what to do next.

"Have you seen her?" he asked.

"I think she is in that group, of priests and nuns under the stern lanthorn," I said.

He compressed his lips, a habit he had whenever he must turn to some task he did not overly care for.

"'Tis a trick I shall find as distasteful as O'Donnell did our colloquy just now," he said shortly. "But we must be about it without delay. Our cannonade will have been heard ashore in Hispaniola with this wind. We must gather our loot and away."

The silence was oppressive as we ascended the poop ladder. A last babble of Latin ended on an hysterical note. The Spanish captain stalked to the far side of the deck, rumbling curses, and fixed his gaze upon the purple hills of Hispaniola. Behind the steering-wheel the black flock of religious gathered closer under the great, gilded lanthorn which crowned the high, pulpit-like recess intended to protect the helmsman; and amongst those cowled shaved heads and shapeless swathed forms the slim grace and sunny blue eyes of Moira O'Donnell were as patent as the growing fear with which her father met us.

"Don Ascanio has placed the conduct of matters in my hands. What is next? Must you—" he began.

He gestured expressively toward the vessel beneath us.

"It seems— I—I find myself— 'Tis a nauseating prospect— Several hundred men—and priests and nuns, Murray— Aye, a cardinal sin, nae I'll never have absolution for, whatever befide—"

"You concern yourself without cause," said Murray soothingly. "We have arranged it differently, and to that end I shall act a part with your daughter which you must support; aye, to the offering of violence. And now, tell me, where is the treasure?"

"In the lazaret."

"Master Saunders!" called my great-uncle, "Take fifty men and break out a quantity of treasure from the lazaret of the prize."

"Aye, aye, sir," returned Saunders, and the pirates fell over themselves in their alacrity to have a hand in his business.

My great-uncle concluded the cleaning of his sword, crossed to the larboard railing and tossed the bloodied handkerchief overboard.

"Oh, Master Martin," he hailed the mate on the poop of the Royal James, "Be so good as to have a whip rigged from the foreyard-arm to sling aboard the treasure which Saunders is breaking out."

"Aye, aye, sir. I'll attend to it all myself," Martin assured him. "—my eyes for a —— —— —— and all the Twelve Apostles, blast 'em for a —— —— lot of —— —— ——."

"A pungent fellow, Martin!" commented my great-uncle, recrossing the deck. "But we must play our little comedy here. You, chevalier, are cast for the Anglished Parent. I am the Aged Retainer. Peter is the Mute with the bow-string—be gentle, Peter. Gadzooks! I scarce know how to describe your role, Robert. You shall be—, are to be Youth? You had best be Youthful Wantonness, and I'll [illegible] and the exigencies of the [illegible] necessary for you to [illegible] with me for the possession [illegible]. But we will [illegible] Play up to me, [illegible] Peter!"

He left [illegible] cracked with a mincing [illegible] of scorn from his real [illegible] to the black-gowned [illegible] surrounding Mistress O'Donnell.

"Stap me, a fair piece, this!" he drawled. "Too fair to bloom unseen. Come hither, mistress!"

But the maid answered him so dauntlessly that it made the blood prickle in my neck.

"A black shame on you, old enough to be the father of me and these others here! I know you for what you are, Captain Rip-Rap, and if you will be thinking I am one to fear you it is a sorry wakening you will have. Oh, you might better be down on your knees, asking pardon for the wickedness you have wrought, than plotting fresh evil, and threatening holy folk with your dreadful torments!"

"So you recognize me?" said our great-uncle. "'Tis an honor, mistress. But I fear you have heard much to my prejudice, and I must press you to visit my ship and learn the contrary."

"Step forward, colonel, and defend her," I muttered under my breath to her father.

He had the grace to blush, but he acted upon my suggestion with a semblance of sincerity.

"Sir, sir, what is this you do?" he cried. "Certes, there is some limit to your law-breaking! The maid is my daughter."

My great-uncle went through his snuff ritual with an artful exaggeration which was couched to one who knew him.

"Unfortunate!" he drawled. "I wish I could sympathize with you, sir."

And to me—

"Robert, you will conduct the lady to the James."

For the first time Mistress O'Donnell's glance lighted fair upon my face.

"Master Ormerod!" she gasped.

"You'd best come quietly, mistress," I snapped.

She flung her hands to fend me off, and the fat monk and the two nuns cast themselves upon us, the monk striking at my head with his heavy crucifix and the nuns scratching and clawing so that I was put to it to protect my eyes. They were surely three of the bravest people who ever lived, and but for Peter they would have worsted me.

The big Dutchman waded stolidly into the confusion, shoved O'Donnell from his path, upset the monk and pushed the two nuns out of the way.

"You take der little gal, Bub," he squeaked.

She struggled with all the strength in her lissome body, but I pinned her hands and tossed her over my shoulder—and then her father attacked me, with the Spanish captain, whose silence had been exhausted by this last outrage.

Murray drew his sword and forced the Spaniard back and Peter slung O'Donnell over his shoulder as easily as I had the maid.

"I got him, ja," he announced to Murray.

My great-uncle sheathed his sword. "Carry him along," he said. "Since he is so much concerned as to his daughter's fate, we will permit him to watch it. Afterward, it may be, he can afford us some additional amusement. Stap me, a most persistent fellow!"

A line of pirates staggered across the decks, backs stooped beneath burdens of portly casks and iron-bound chests, wire-wrapped and padlocked, each a-dangle with leaden seals impressed with the arms of the Spanish king. They leered at my writhing captive, but they all looked quickly away as my great-uncle descended to us.

"Can you manage her alone?" he asked me curtly.

"I'll manage her or go overboard with her," I barked.

He smiled.

"The right spirit, lad! Tut, tut, mistress," as she wrenched a hand free and dug at my eyes. "You concern yourself for nothing. We have but played at a game. Observe your father's attitude."

Ford

Highest in Quality Lowest in Price

Ford cars are built throughout of the finest materials that can be produced. The very best steels available are used in Ford manufacture. The plate glass for windshields and windows is as perfect as can be made. Upholstery material contains a larger percentage of wool than is ordinarily specified—even for much higher priced cars. The basic features of Ford design have never been improved upon by any manufacturer.

No other car offers greater dependability. The Ford car has won the favor of millions of users under every conceivable motoring condition. Its convenience is known and appreciated the world over; its performance is taken for granted.

Such quality is possible at Ford prices because every operation, from mining of ore to final assembly, is under direct control of the Ford Motor Company.

Iron is taken from Ford mines in Michigan; coal from the Company's mines in Kentucky and West Virginia. Glass comes from Ford glass plants; wood from the Ford timber tracts in the North. Raw materials and finished products are carried over the Company's own transportation routes; coke ovens, blast furnaces, a steel mill, foundries and saw mills—all are part of this complete organization. There are even salvage plants, paper mill, cement plant, etc., to transform waste materials into useful by-products.

In this way every possible economy is effected. Under no other circumstances could Ford quality be had at Ford prices.

Farmers, Attention

We are now contracting pickle acreage for the coming season. Several of our growers received better than $200 cash per acre last year, and pickles are a good spot-cash crop.

Many farmers have already written in for acreage and we have reserved contracts for them. As our acreage is limited, we urge you to call for your contract now at our dill packing room in the old Cooperative building, or phone us, No. 25. Or, write in so we may reserve acreage for you before our contracts are all gone.

ODD FELLOW MEMORIAL SERVICES

Well Attended Service at the Methodist Church

Last Sunday morning was Odd Fellow memorial hour at the Methodist Episcopal church. A fine representation of the local lodges of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Rebekahs attended the service. They made a fine appearance, and with their significant regalia lent color to the occasion.

The pastor spoke from the subject, "The Princely Soul." He said that all true brotherhood is a challenge to the inner life. No organization is stronger than the characters of the people who compose it. A princely organization must have as its members people with princely souls. He maintained by argument and illustration that the princely jewels of a fine brotherhood are friendship, love and truth, making these words the divisons of his addreas.

These he stated are qualities of the inner life, and are princely characteristics. He illustrated the subject of the sermon by saying that David was a prince because God had chosen him as a future king of Israel. Jonathan was a prince because he was the son of king Saul. But more important than any of these accidents of royalty was the fact that these men were each princely in character. Some qualities are attainable by any person and are greatly needed in the present condition of society.

It was a happy occasion, both for the church and the lodge, and served to bind in closer good fellowship these great institutions, that have so much in common.

PLANE PROCURED TO COMPLETE CONTRACT

Donnellan Here Monday from Grand Rapids With New Ship

Captain J. F. Donnellan returned to Charlevoix Monday afternoon at about 3:30 o'clock from Grand Rapids, where he procured a plane to finish out his contract to carry mail to Beaver Island. After doing a few loop-the-loops and other stunts over the city, he landed on the field south of the school house on the south hill.

Remaining here only about half an hour, he left for St. James, carrying a few sacks of first class mail, returning later in the evening accompanied by Alvin Yeider, his mechanic, who has been marooned on the island since the 18th of April. Yeider left Tuesday afternoon for Chicago, where he will visit his family and get parts to repair the damaged plane on the island.

Donnellan stated he would finish out his contract to carry the mail to St. James. Plans to form a carrier company are under way, but nothing definite has been settled as yet.

PRIMARY ELECTIONS COME LATER THIS YEAR

Only 48 Days for Electioneering Given Candidates

Primary elections this year will be September 14. This is a later date than in any previous year since the first primary law was enacted more than 20 years ago. The reason is because the legislature last year in its revision of the election laws changed the date to the second Tuesday in Septmber. Just 48 days, including Sundays, will elapse between primary and general election day, November 2. Under the revised code August 10 is the last day for filing nomination petitions.

The minimum number of signatures on nomination petitions this year for Republican candidates for governor and lieutenant governor is 9,012, for democratic candidates for these offices, 1,890; or prohibtion, 68; social labor, 45. These are the only four political parties legally organized in Michigan.

City and township officials should also remember that under the new law it is mandatory to publish both registration and election notices in some local newspaper. The law applies to primaries as well as all elections.

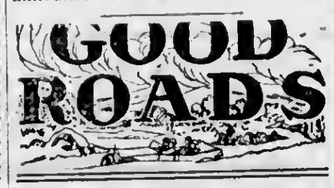
His services has been engaged by the Emmet County Road commission, and he entered upon his new duties last Monday morning. His successor has not yet been engaged.

Attend Meeting at Boyne

About thirty-five members of the local Odd Fellow lodge attended the meeting of the Odd Fellow County Club association, held at Boyne City, Tuesday evening. Two hundred and fifty lodge members from all parts of the county were in attendance and enjoyed the fine banquet provided. Plans were laid and committees appointed at this meeting for the annual Odd Fellow County picnic, date and place of meeting to be announced at a later date.



WAY OF FINANCING FEDERAL AID ROADS

Some very interesting facts about the true source of the governmental income used to build federal aid roads have recently been brought to light by the investigation of the American Association of State Highway Officials into road-building finances.

One of the most interesting facts shows that though some states pay heavily into the federal treasury, the real source of revenue paid by them comes from other states.

To illustrate this point, the association cites the cases of Michigan and North Carolina. Seventy-three per cent of the automobile excise taxes paid in this country are paid by the state of Michigan. "But this money," the association finds, "comes from the entire country. The taxpayers of Michigan do not really pay the 7.9 per cent of the total revenue which the state sends to the federal treasury, for almost half of Michigan's total federal tax is the excise tax paid on motor vehicles and this tax is paid by the buyers of motor vehicles who live in every state in the Union. These states pay the money to Michigan and Michigan forwards it to the United States treasury.

The same situation exists in North Carolina. Here large revenue payments are made by the tobacco company. In this state 86 per cent of the federal revenue comes from tobacco in its manufactured form. This revenue which tobacco manufacturers send to the federal government is not obtained from the citizens of North Carolina, but from tobacco users wherever they may be. So while North Carolina is theoretically credited with large contributions to federal income, persons living outside the state in reality pay much of the money credited to North Carolina.

"This situation," says the association, "is typical of many states which are heavy contributors to the federal treasury. Basic wealth, that is wealth based on the annual value of the products of the mine, the forest, and the farm, really is paying the bill, regardless of where the final checks come from."

Some states, the association finds, are forwarding taxes on property not located within that state. New York, for example, sent 22.8 per cent of the national corporation tax paid by manufacturing, while Pennsylvania sent in but 11 per cent. The manufacturing plants and equipment were valued in New York at $2,138,897,000 while the value for Pennsylvania was $2,193,873,000. Since New York paid more than twice as much as Pennsylvania on less valuation, the association concludes, that there are manufacturing corporations whose charters or office locations cause them to pay income tax in New York on properly located elsewhere.

The conclusion drawn from these facts is that the degree of financial responsibility for each state is equitably traced through a comparison of percentages of population, basic wealth and total wealth, rather than through internal revenue payments.

Washington Will Spend $17,000,000 for Roads

More than $17,000,000 is to be spent on Washington state's pay-as-you-go road-building program during the coming biennium.

Of this sum, it is estimated $14,500,000 will be available from licenses for motor vehicles, and a tax of 2 cents a gallon on gasoline; $2,250,000 from federal aid, and nearly $500,000 from forest funds.

Four bridges on the Pacific highway between Everett and Marysville, in the northwestern section of the state, will absorb $1,000,000.

During the last 20 years Washington state has appropriated $50,000,000 for highways and received $10,000,000 from the federal aid fund, and has 2,405 miles of improved highways to show for its money.

THIS EDITOR HAS THE RIGHT IDEA

Not Afraid to Tell the World His Advertising Rates

A southern Michigan editor grown tired of running free advertisements and being pestered almost to distraction with requests for free publicity which should be paid for at regular advertising rates, makes the following rates in an adv. of his own and is not afraid to tell the world about it:

"Here you will find a schedule of prices from which no deviation will be made, but we hope to donate a certain percentage of our earnings toward founding an asylum for those feeble-minded people who believe an editor has a snap.

"For telling our readers a man is a successful citizen when everybody knows he is a lazy bench warmer, $2.75.

"For referring to some gallavanting fellow as one who is mourned by the entire community when he will only be missed by the boozers, $10.18.

"Referring to one as a hero and a man of courage and one who will stand by his convictions when everybody knows he is a moral coward and would sell out for a dime, $4.13.

"Referring to some gossipy female as an estimable lady whom it is a pleasure to meet and know when every man in town would rather see Satan coming, $8.10.

"Calling an ordinary preacher an eminent divine, 54 cents.

"Lambasting the daylights out of John Barleycorn at the behest of the local dry forces, $6.77.

"Whooping em up for the repeal of the Volstead law in the interest of the local White Mule Club, $6.77.

"Referring to a deceased merchant who never advertised and who was too stingy to contribute toward needed public improvements as a leading citizen and a progressive resident, $344.99.

Word comes from Charlotte, Michigan, thnt Dr. John A. Auld and family are now residents of that city. Dr. Auld's health forced him to give up trying to farm at Eaton Rnpids, where he locnted when he left Charlevoix, and they trnded for nn apartment house in Charlotte.

The Rebekah lodge will hold their nnnual birthday party in the I. O. O. F. hall, Monday evening, May 3. The event is staged to honor birthday anniversaries of members of the order. Prior events have proven to be very enjoyable occasions and a good social time is alwnys in store for those who nttend. A pot luck supper will be served at the usual hour.

"Ninety years young and still going strong," is the manner John Johnson, well known south side resident, has life sized up. Mr. Johnson was 90 years old Tuesday. He is hale and hearty, works a little every day just to keep himself in shape for the summer's rush. Neighbors showered him with congratulntions. He tnkes the attitude of a fellow we once knew who snid, "the first 100 years of a man's life is the hardest. After that, there is nothing to it."

A communication was received recently by Archie Livingston, local representative of the Belvedere Golf Realty Co., stating that Lavern A. Miller of the Miller Landscape Service, Sterling, Ill., who is the architect and lnndscape expert in charge of the new Belvedere golf course, will leave Sterling, April 30th, by aeroplane on a trip to inspect various projects now under way by the company in the Michigan, one of which is the Belvedere golf course. The communication atated that Mr. Miller would arrive in Charlevoix between the first and seventh of May.

SHAKESPEARE'S 362ND ANNIVERSARY HONORED

Local Shakespearinns Gathered at Noble House Last Friday

Thirty-eight guests were present at the Informal Shakespeare club supper at the Noble house last week Friday.

Mrs. Swinton, the president, was in a humoroua mood when ahe greeted her club and its guests, marking the spirit of the evening. She introduced Ralph Price, who presented nn original musical aketch in wbich titles and characters of Shakespeare's plays were adroitly interwoven. Dr. Mattson followed, and in a pleasing mnnner related his experiences, in company with three college friends, on a bicycle trip through England, visiting London, the Lake region, several cathedrals and Stratford.

This happy event was held on the 23rd of April, the 362nd anniversary of Shakespeare'a birth.

GAYLORD BANK TO HELP THE FARMER

Creates $5,000 Fund for Purchase of Better Dairy Cattle

The Gnylord State Savings Bank has created a $5,000 fund to be used in helping to fianace the farmers to buy better dairy cnttle. Cnttle may be bought on the small payment plan at a low rate of interest. The bank's announcement of this fund says:

"Good dairy cows will do more to make Otsego county prosperous than any other thing within our reach.

"We here in the bank have been mnking a study of what the dairy industry has done for many other communities like ours. Without exception where the good dairy cow has been given a chance she has proven her value as a leader in, and a developer of prosperity.

"Those of our farmers that pay their interest most promptly and who reduce their loans with the greatest regularity and precision, are the ones with good sized weekly cream checks. These men, for the most part are our best risks. They borrow confidently, intelligently, nnd usually for improvements. They borrow confidently beenuse they have a stendy income, and know they can repay these monies within n reasonable time.

"The dairy farmer is usually successful. We need successful farmers. Therefore we need dairymen. That is why the Gaylord State Savings Bank is putting on n real honest to good dairy program."

We noticed that in a previous issue of the Courier, that some unknown person is finding fault with our club, for the reason that it does not work in harmony with his younger days. We have a small club with good members who observe the by-laws, of which we will mention a few. First, that no member is allowed to indulge in any strong drink. Second, that all members are to give the flappers a wide birth. Third, that all members are to look before they leap. Times have changed since our critic was young. There was no broadcasting or flappers then—just true girls. If he was young again, and someone started a Girl Shy Club, we bet he would be the first to join. And, he would observe the speed limit and keep his foot off the gas for fear that he would run too close to something that would hook him around the neck.—Members Girl Shy Club.

FREE MOTION PICTURES AT CENTRAL LAKE

Village Also to Pave Several of Its Main Streets

Central Lake believes in entertaining its all-year round residents as well as the hundreds who spend the summer in their vicinity. Last year they provided free motion pictures, as we understand, at least one night a week. This year they have raised the necessary funds to repeat the entertainment, possibly on a larger scale. The stunt made a hit with all and resulted in the village being the center of attraction in that vicinity.

They also plan on carrying through extensive street improvements, and will pave their main street and several side streets with tarvia.

Improvements and amusements of this kind are in keeping with the times. Northern Michigan will undoubtedly entertain the greatest number of people in its history this season, and Central Lake will get more than her share if the program outlined is carried out.

Please Return It.

Will the person who borrowed the thills off my buggy, also the top, a new one put on last summer, please return them as I shall need them this summer. This will be appreciated by an old lady, all alone. I will loan them next winter if the person who wants them will just ask permission to take them. Mrs. J. A. Howe, Route 4, Box 18, Charlevoix. —Adv. 17t1.

DATES BACK TO ANCIENT TIMES

rich fruit cake but the outside was made of flour and water.

It is a far cry from this quaint observance in England of Mid-Lent to American Mother's Day. There is no unbroken line of descent to the present observance from the holiday when English apprentices went a-mothering, though the modern festival is perhaps the most conscious and deliberate effort in nation ever made to honor motherhood.

The observance of the second Sunday in May as Mother's Day has now become firmly established in this country. The object of the setting aside of this day is to honor the memories of mothers who have gone, to brighten the lives of those who remain, and to foster among men, women and children the love of their homes and their parents. The day is observed by showing some kindness to mother, by services in churches of every creed, and by celebrations of other organizations.

Mother's Day just received widespread recognition about 1910 when it was observed by a number of cities in the United States. On May 10, 1913, a resolution passed both houses of congress commending the observance of the day by congress and the executive departments of the government. In the same year Nebraska made it a state Flag day in honor of the patriotism of Nebraska's homes. In 1914 congress authorized the President of the United States to designate by annual proclamation the second Sunday in May as Mother's Day and to display the American flag on government buildings and private homes. The first national proclamation setting aside this day was issued by President Wilson on May 9, 1914.

Since its inception the celebration of this day has spread beyond the fondest expectations of its founders. People in search of ways and means of expressing their love for their mother have made use of various existing services. At first the observance consisted very largely of the wearing of white carnations as being symbolic of the purity, beauty, fidelity, and peace of mother love. Some sections of the country have taken to the wearing of red carnations and in other words the wearing of almost any flower is considered a fitting observance of the occasion. In some cities friendless mothers in hospitals and other institutions are adopted for the day by business men.

As time went on the observance of the day took different forms. The sending of flowers to mother came into vogue. Still later the sending of candy to mother developed to a considerable extent. Then came greeting cards and now she is remembered by the sending of telegrams. One telegraph company has even printed a leaflet of suggested messages appropriate for the occasion and has provided special blanks for the conveying of Mother's Day messages.

OH! MY BACK

Aching Backs Make Life Miserable For Many Charlevoix People

It isn't right to suffer day in and day out with dull, unceasing backache. Or be utterly miserable with sharp stabs of pain whenever you stoop or lift. But chances are you will suffer these tormenting aches and pains as long as your weakened kidneys are neglected. You may have headaches, too, spells of dizziness and urinary disorders. Then use Doan's Pills—a stimulent diuretic to the kidneys. Experiences of Charlevoix people prove the merit of Doan's.

W. H. Guild, prop. "Fixit" shop, 109 Antrim St., Charlevoix, says: "I had an attack of backache and kidney trouble and was so bad, I had to stop work entirely. Sharp, stabbing pains darted across my kidneys when I turned quickly. Finally I got so I could hardly get out of my chair. My kidneys acted irregularly, too. Nothing seemed to give me any relief until I used Doan's Pills. One box cured me."

"We Serve Michigan"

What Co-operation Is Accomplishing

THE American shipping public since the war period has come to realize a certain responsibility devolving upon it beyond the mere payment of the authorized charges for the transportation service performed.

There is, for instance, the requirement of the prompt loading and unloading of the railroad equipment on the part of consignors and consignees, respectively.

There is the obligation on the shipper of early advice of car requirements to enable the railroads to "mobilize" equipment.

THESE two requirements enter largely and eventually into the cost of steam railroad transportation and they are dependent upon the good-will directly manifested by the shippers and altogether beyond the control of the railroads.

Recognition of these factors has brought about the organization of the Shippers Regional Advisory Boards and enables the country to get more service from the equipment of the American railroads.

THIS is entirely voluntary service on the part of the shippers and is a unique page in the history of business. It has also been a profitable expedient, a lesson in co-operation gained from the world war, a phase in the onward march of the times, which Judge E. H. Gary, of the United States Steel Corporation, recently described as the application of the Golden Rule in business, a condition that was inconceivable twenty-five years ago.

It is a manifestation of a quiet but certain revolution in American business thought which is gradually progressing towards the finest ideals, and incidentally tending to the greater well-being of our people and making for greater material returns.

THE Michigan Railroad Association is keeping step with the shippers and heartily seconding those ideals of an enlightened business opinion and appreciates that this policy is as important to the stabilizing of business as are the operations of the Federal Reserve Bank System in its particular branch of public economy. In fact, it is the identical application of that principle to transportation. Michigan industry has much to gain through the policy of the Shippers' Regional Advisory Boards.

THE OLDHAM UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT

Mrs. Grace L. Oldham Will Carry on Business

The Oldham, formerly under the management of the lute Harry L. Oldham, will continae to be one of Charlevoix's leading attractions during the coming season, and will without doubt enjoy the same patronsge under the management of Mrs. Grace L. Oldham, who will carry on the business.

Mrs. Oldham states that indicntions are that The Club will serve a greater number of summer people during 1926 season than in the past. Inquiries are coming in daily und by the time of the opening date, set for June 25, her bookings will task the capacity of the cluh.

Special attention will be given to table service, the services of an excellent chef from Philadelphia having been engaged: Charlevoix is facing what we believe to be the largest resort year of its history, and The Oldham will receive her share of this patronage. According to Mrs. Oldham, early arrivals will be taken care of before the opening date.

Monday, May 3rd, is the date when Dr. J. Lenhy, the optometrist, will be at the Hotel Charlevoix. One day only.—Adv. 16-t2.

TOTAL COST OF CONCRETE ROADS

Total county's share of cost of 12.5 miles.....$101,834.62

Thus it will be seen that the whole of the $100,000.00 provided for this work by sale of bonds, was required and an additional $1834.62 was necessary in order to complete payment of the county's share and all of the above is for concrete road.

The above stutements do not include any of the expense of constructing the gravel road on M-11 south of the conerete road nor the piece of concrete built at Bay Shore last season, the county's share of which had to be provided for from the county road tax.

W. E. Byers,
County Roud Commissioner.

We believe this statement covers in detail all receipts and disbursements. It shows that not only our share of the county bond issue, $100,000.00 was spent, but $1,834.41 of other road funds. This amount can be reudily accounted for, as the road north of Charlevoix was built during the peak of high prices, caused by the World war. Also, it does not include our share of the construction cost of the stretch of concrete built last season, connecting the old concrete at Bay Shore with Emmet county.

SOUTH ARM LODGE WERE GUESTS HERE

East Jordan Pythians Entertained By Local Order

Pine Lake Lodge No. 122, Knights of Pythias, entertained their brother lodge members from East Jordan, last Thursday evening.

About thirty members of the visiting organization were present, bringing with them three candidates, who, along with one Charlevoix candidate, were given the second rank work by members of both orders. At the end of the business meeting, refreshments were served nnd short talks by local and visiting Pythians were enjoyed.

We have been requested to announce that Past Chancellor's night, which was scheduled for Thursday, April 29th, has been postponed until Thursday evening, Muy 6, on accoant of the meeting at East Jordan on Wednesday evening of this week, to which all local Pythians are invited. There will be work in the second rank at the regular meeting of the lodge this Thursday evening, April 29.

BAD FIRE AT RUSSELL HOUSE

Basement and Kitchen Partially Destroyed In Blaze

Fire originating in the basement of the Russell House, East Jordan, caused considerablo damage at a late hour last Thursday night. Smoke from the fire was discovered about 11:00 p. m., un alarm turned in, and prompt nnd efficient work on the part of the East Jordan fire department saved the two-story frame building from destruction. The main blaze seemed to center around under the floor of the kitchen and broke through that part of the building.

Both the basement and the kitchen are in pretty bad shape. Adjustment of insurance hus not as yet been made and the proprietor, John Shier, is undecided as to what the loss will amount.

Owing to the intense smoke everyone in the hotel was compelled to leave, but after the fire was put under control several traveling men returned to their rooms.

SOUTH POINT SOLD TO MUSKEGON MAN

Barry and Meech, Local Brokers, Negotiated the Deal

That real estate is on the move and a boom in resort property is near at hand is evidenced by the sale last week of the ninety acre tract known as South Point, to Charles Latimer of Muskegon, Michigan.

It is the intention of the new owner to develop the property and place it on the market as a sub-division. Barry and Meech, local real estate dealers, negotiated the sale of the tract, which is admirably suited for the purpose in view by Mr. Latimer, and is the largest deal of this kind so far completed.

Michigan avenue will be made more attractive this season by the removul of what is known as the Frank Lamphear cottage, purchased last fall by Alvin D. Goldman, and last week re-sold to Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Paddock, who will move the buliding across the street to the lots owned by them.

This move will greatly add to the attractiveness of Michigan avenue, and furnish a beautiful, well appointed cottnge for the conevenience of our summer people.

We understand Mr. Goldman will convert the space formerly occupied by the cottage into a beautiful park und playground.

CHICAGO FREIGHT RUN OPENS MAY 6

Steamers Will Make Ports North as Far as Harbor Springs

The Michigan Transit Company will open navigation to northern Michigan points on Saturday, May 1st, leaving Chicago at 6 p. m. on that day.

The company will start through passenger and freight service at that time, the steamer going as far north as Harbor Springs. Other points on the route to be touched include Ludington, Manistee, Onekama, Frankfort, Glen Huven, Northport, Omena, Suttons Bay, Traverse City, Charlevoix, Petoskey, Harbor Springs, Boyne City, East Jordan and St. Jnmes. The local freight house opened for freight shipments on Monday of this week.

BAPTIST CHURCH

The annual letter to the Grand Traverse Baptist Association will be submitted to the church at the morning service. The past year has been on of great successes. Financially, socially and spiritually the victories have been many, and the church will send its greetings to the association with profound gratitude to Him who has given us our every blessing.

The services next Sunday will be of the usual character—preaching at 10:30 a. m and at 7:30 p. m. Bible school at 12:00 m., and B. Y. P. U. at 6:30.

The Grand Traverse Association, of which the local church is a member, will meet with the Parr Memorial church in Petoskey, Thursday und Friday. Pastor Burns is to give the annual sermon, and other members of the church have pinces on the program. It is hoped that a large delegation will go from here.

The church is saddened again by the death of Brother William Sanford, who passed away in Detroit the fore part of the week. He had been n great sufferer for severnl months. We will remember pleasantly his visit here lnst summer. The family will have the sympathy of the church in their sorrow.

A cordial invitation is extended to all who have no other regular place to worship to join with us. A hearty welcome to all such to worship with us.

Hasty Departure From City Aroused Suspicion and Resulted in Arrest

A woman giving her name as Miss Catherine Collier, and her address, Ironton, Ohio, was apprehended at Walton Junction, Monday afternoon by Cadillac officers, after causing considerable trouble for officers in Traverse City, Charlevoix and Petoskey.

The excitement started Monday morning at about five o'clock, when Ed. O'Neill received a telephone call to bring a taxi to the fire hall for a party to go to Petoskey. Upon arrival there, a young woman stepped out of the door of the treasurer's office and came out to the taxi, saying that she was the party who called and let it be known that she wanted to go to Petoskey. Although suspicious, Mr. O'Neill told her to get in and they started out of town, going down State street, which she requested, giving as her reason that she wanted to get an address on the way out. Upon arrival in Petoskey, the young woman hastily left the car, handing Mr. O'Neill part of the fare over, saying that she would give him the balance the next time she was town. Her haste to get away aroused further suspicion, but when Ed. tried to locate her again his efforts were unsuccessful, so he returned to Charlevoix and reported the matter to Sheriff Novak.

An investigation started at once, which brought out the fact that Miss Collier had come here from Harbor Springs, Sunday afternoon and registered at the Charlevoix Hotel. That night it is alleged she relieved a guest there of $40 and hence her hnsty departure from town. From the hotel she went to the court house, entered through the fire hall, went on through the building and made her telephone call from the treasurer's office and walked out through the front door when Mr. O'Neill called with the taxi. After arriving in Petoskey, she went to the Cushman Hotel, where she got her breakfast, leaving later on the morning train, south. Officers at Cadillac were notified to be on the lookout for her and she was picked up at Walton Junction and taken from there to Traverse City, where she wns wanted for relieveing a man of $63 last week.

In Traverse City, officers had the woman searched, but it was found that she had rid herself of the money taken, probably mailing it to some place in the southern part of the state. For this reason no charge could be placed against her, and after being questioned she was released.

Grand Lodge Officers Coming

Grand Master Hanson of East Tawas, and Grand Secretary Fred A. Rogers of Lansing, officers of the state lodge of Odd Fellows, will be in Charlevoix Friday evening, May 7, and meet with the local I. FURNITURE DEPARTMENT NOW OPEN TO PUBLIC

Charlevoix Hardware Company Announces Opening Day

The Charlevoix Hardware Company announces in this issue the opening of their new furniture and house furnishings department, and invite the public to their store on Saturday, May 8, to inspect the beautiful lines they now have in stock. They are making a six-day event of the affair and have published the fact widely throughout northern Michigan.

This is the company's 55th year in business, during which time they have maintained a standard for quality and fair dealing. To the hardware and electrical departments of the store has now been added the furniture and house furnishings department, the stock on hand including the latest in furniture, a full line of glassware, dinner ware, crockery, also window shades, curtain rods, table scarfs and cushions. In fact, everything needed to furnish a home can be found at the store. L. A. Cannon, who is thoroughly experienced in this line, will have personal charge of the furniture department.

It is the company's aim to make this a big celebration. Music will greet visitors at the store Saturday, and souvenirs will be presented to the ladies. The public is cordially invited to attend the opening. Read their announcement on page six.

DICKEN CLUB ANNUAL BANQUET

PROVED AN EVENT OF UNUSUAL INTEREST

Members of Club and Their Husbands and Invited Guests Greatly Enjoy Occasion

The annual banquet of the Dickens Club was held at the Noble Hotel the evening of April 27th, and was an event of unusual interest to the members of the club and to their husbands and other invited friends. The banquet tables were decorated in the club colors, Chinese blue and yellow and hand painted place cards indicated the seating places for guests. The cuisine and service were very acceptable and the spirit of comradship and mirth made the evening one long to be remembered by those present.

Mrs. Harley Ochs, the club president, greeted the guests in a welcoming speech that was both gracious and witty.

At the close of the dinner Mrs. Jarley arrived with her famous collection of wax works and presented an evening's entertainment which much amused and delighted the guests. The orginal of the "Jarley Wax Works" was taken from Dickens' "Old Curiosity Shop," but it was thought by those present that Dickens must have visited Charlevoix before he wrote that story as this display showed an up to date knowledge of our city and it inhabitants. The costuming and manipulation of these wax figures were both unique and original and all felt that they had enjoyed an evening'a entertainment of very unusual character.

FOUR-YEAR-OLD BOY MEETS INSTANT DEATH SATURDAY

Accident Took Place on Ferry Avenue While Youngster Was Crossing Highway

David Kenneth Nowland, son of Mr. and Mrs. Irving Nowland of this city, was instantly killed at about nine o'clock last Saturday morning, May 1, when run down by the auto truck belonging to the Charlevoix Cooperative Association.

The young lad, who would have been four years old on Monday of this week, was playing in the yard at his home on Ferry avenue, near the Parmelee warehouse. It seems that he had followed his older sister across the road where she had been sent to dump some rubbish near the railroad tracks. They had both started back home again, the boy in the lead, and at the same time the truck, driven by Albert Shaw, was coming towards town from the Co-Ops. The attention of the lad was detracted by a freight train that was passing at the time, and, while watching the train pass, he ran with his head turned toward the track, directly into the path of the oncoming truck, with the result that he was run down and instantly killed and probably never knew what hit him.

An inquest was held at the court house Saturday by orders of Prosecuting Attorney A. L. Fitch, and, after questioning Shaw fully, the jury returned a verdict of death resulting from an unavoidable accident.

Besides his grief stricken parents, the young lad is survived by three sister, Lela, Freda and Minnibel, also two brother, Amos and Edward and his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Abe Nowland.

Funeral services were held Monday afternoon at two o'clock, from the residence, Rev. Herman Burns of the Baptist church, officiating. Interment at Brookside cemetery.

AGED NORWOOD RESIDENT DIED MONDAY

Mrs. Emily Richardson Mourned by a Host of Friends

Mrs. Emily Richardson, age 85 years, died at four o'clock Monday afternoon, April 3, at the home of Wm. Richardson in Norwood.

Emily Picket was born at West Chazry, New York, April 9, 1841, where she was educated, spent her girlhood days and taught school. She was married April 10, 1860, to Amos Richardson, and, in 1861, when Mr. Richardson was called to serve in the Civil war, leaving his wife and daughter, she returned to teaching school until the end of the war. In 1867, Mr. and Mrs. Richardson, with their daughter, Della, and son, Charles, moved onto a farm near Norwood, where she has since made her home.

Deceased is survived by two sons, Charles of Detroit, and William of Norwood, six grand-children, two nieces and four nephews, besides a host of friends.

Mrs. Richardson was a life-long member of the Methodist church, was an active worker for the church, always doing her duty and trying to help others.

At this time funeral arrangements have not been completed.

CITY BAND WILL GIVE A CONCERT

THURSDAY, MAY 13, AT THE PALACE THEATRE

Fine Program of Sixteen Numbers Has Been Prepared. Proceeds to Buy Needed Equipment

The Charlevoix city band will give a concert at the Palace Theatre next Thursday evening, May 13, and residents of the city are promised an evening of supreme entertainment.

The boys have been practicing diligently throughout the winter months and this will be their first public appearance since late last fall. The program is interspersed with vocal and instrumental specialties by local singers and band members, which will prove a rare treat. Following is the program:

1. "March of the Bersaglieri," Eilenberg: Band.
2. Piano solo, selected: Mrs. Stelter.
3. Cornet solo, "Three Star Polka": A. J. Winnick.
4. "Ciribiribin Waltz," Pestalozza: Band.
5. "O Sole Mio," D. Capua: Trombone with band.
6. Saxaphone Trio, selected: Fessenden, Bersaw, Bellinger.
7. "Campus Memories," Seredy: Band.
8. Clarinet and cornet duet, "Sextette from Lucia": Wagner and Winnick.
9. Vocal solo, selected: Mrs. Adams.
10. Clarinet solo, "Sally in Our Alley": Wagner.
11. "Operatic Gems," Sullivan: Band.
12. Vocal solo, selected: Claude Greenway.
13. "Dancing Dolls," Seredy: Band.
14. Vocal trio, selected: Miller and company.
15. "Home Circle Overature," Schepegrell: Band.
16. "Stars and Stripes Forever," Sousa: Band.

With a busy summer season in prospect, a band will be one of our best drawing cards. The proceeds from this concert will be used to purchase needed equipment for the band and the support of the public is earnestly requested. Come out and give the boys your support.

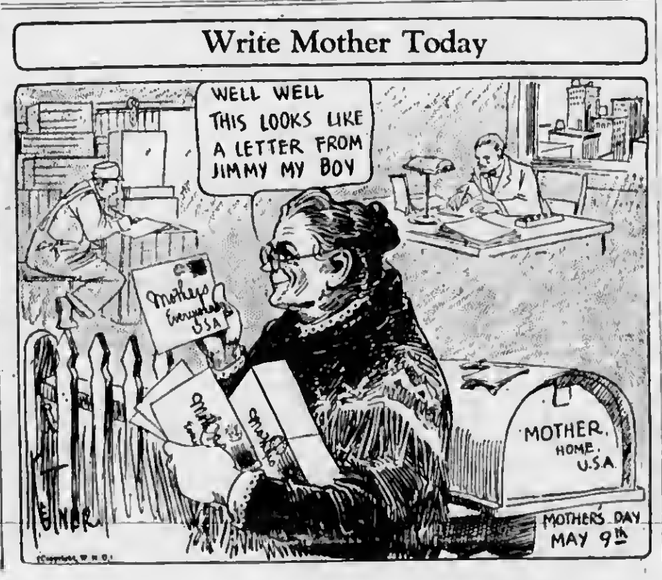
CHARLEVOIX WILL CELEBRATE FOURTH OF JULY

Some First Class Entertainment Features on Program

The county Fourth of July celebration will be held in Charlevoix this year in accordance with the tri-city agreement that has been followed out of the past few years.

Members of the city council and Association of Commerce are now making preliminary plans to entertaining the large crowds who will be the city's guests on that day, and committees have been appointed for this purpose.

The main features of entertainment will be provided this year by the Western Vaudeville Manger's Association. Two outdoor performances of three acts each will be given by airial performers known as the Airial Crawfords, and a 58-piece fireworks display, lasting over an hour will feature the evening entertainment. Other stunts and contests as in former years will also be pulled off.



BEAVER RESIDENTS GET OWN AIR LINE

Buy Plane and Will Seek Mail Transport Contract

A company has been formed among the residents of Beaver Island known as the Beaver Island Air service. It has purchased a Curtis airplane from J. R. Murphy of Grand Rapids and will seek to obtain a contract with the postoffice department for carrying the mails between Charlevoix and the islands in the winter after navigation has closed. This winter mail service hitherto has been conducted by dog teams and ponies at considerable hazard to men, animals and mail.

It is reported the company has purchased the damaged plane now at St. James, Beaver Island, belonging formerly to the Air Transit Co., a Chicago concern. This plane was damaged by a gale while resting on its landing place on the ice at St. James harbor after it had taken a cargo of mail from the mainland and was waiting the return mail for Charlevoix.

A member of the Beaver Island company said last week Thursday the company planned to acquire a seaplane of large capacity for passenger service in the summer resort season. Capt. J. F. Donnellan of Chicago, who piloted the plane damaged in the mail service to the island, will fly for the newly formed company.

ANTRIM COUNTY PIONEER DEAD

JOHN PARSONS, SR., PASSED AT AGE OF 92 YEARS

Was a Resident of Banks Township for 64 Years. Had a Host of Friends

John Parsons, Sr., one of Banks township's oldest pioneers, died last Friday morning, April 30, at the home of his son, George S. Parsons, near Atwood.

Deceased was born in Cornwell, England, April 1, 1834, and was 92 years old at the time of his death. In 1855 he immigrated to Canada, residing there one year. In 1856 he came to the United States, settling in Jefferson county, Wisconsin. He came to Banks township in 1862, taking up a homestead of 160 acres, returning to Wisconsin two years later to bring his family back with him.

In 1858, Mr. Parsons married Miss Sarah Jane Cook at Waukesa City. To this union were born eight children: Mary Himebauch, (deceased), Ida Joliffe, James and William, (deceased), George Parsons, Albert Parsons, Elizabeth Peebles and John Parsons, Jr. He is also survived by one sister, Mrs. Daniel Himebauch and a host of friends who will mourn his departure. After the death of his wife September 13, 1901, Mr. Parsons made his home with his daughter, Mrs. Peebles, up until the past 18 months, from which time he had resided at the home of his son, George.

Funeral services were held Sunday morning at 10:30 o'clock from the Methodist church in Atwood, Rev. C. M. Conklin officiating. The remains were laid to rest beside those of his late wife in the Antrim cemetery.

"Grandpa" Parsons, as he was fondly called by his great number of friends, was loved by all who knew him, and will be greatly missed.

FOUR BIRTHDAYS WERE CELEBRATED IN ONE

Fifty-one People Attended Pleasant Affair Monday Night

About fifty-one people were present at a birthday party held Monday evening at the Odd Fellow hall, in honor of the anniversaries of Sandy Shearer, Roy Bowdish, Henry Wagner and Mrs. Lois Cook, whose birthdays came on the same day, although the last named was unable to be present and is now in Muskegon on her way home.

A very delightful supper was laid out before the guests, who did full justice to its excellence. Two large birthday cakes adorned the center of the table and the feast was a merry one. The remainder of the evening was pleasantly spent in dancing and cards, the guests departing after many toasts and good wishes for the honored ones of the evening.

FORM "IKE" WALTON CHAPTER

STATE REPRESENTATIVE HERE LAST WEEK

League Has General Conservation of the Outdoors as Its Object—Many Sign Up.

Charlevoix has taken the initial step towards the organization of an Isaac Walton Chapter. E. C. Bessett, national representative of the Isaac Walton League. E. C. Basin the city last week and with a number of local enthusiasts, started the movement which will result in the organization. Among those who have already affixed their signatures to the membership roll are: W. E. Parmelee, C. F. Wood, A. J. Usher, K. A. Usher, F. E. Cartier, F. J. Fessenden, J. R. Cooper, T. L. Pearl, E. L. Denny, Harold Meggison and B. A. Herman.

Clarence F. Wood was appointed by Mr. Bassett as acting treasurer of the organization. Ten memberships are required before a charter is obtainable. There is no limit to the membership, however, and it is the desire of those backing the organization movement to have every sportsmen and conservation enthusiast enlisted. If you have not already signed up, get in touch with Mr. Wood immediately. Charlevoix needs a live Isaac Walton Club, and now is our opportunity to get one.

Aim—General Conservation

The chief aim of the Izaak Walton League, which is somewhat believed by its name, is the general conservation of outdoor life in America, both plant and animal. Men who have never wet a fish line or pulled a trigger may consistently and cheerfully subscribe to its policies. It is a national organization of fishermen, hunters and outdoor lovers, having no commercial or personal gain or aggrandizement under it; nor political or religious interests, but dedicated to the restoration of sports afield and astream in the United States and Canada and maintaining for its slogan: "We Pledge Ourselves To Do Our Best To Restore For Posterity The Outdoor America Of Our Ancestors."

It is undoubtedly the most comprehensive conservation program ever undertaken in America. Though just four years old, it has local chapters from one end of the country to the other, and it has awakened thousands and thousands of principled sportsmen and outdoor lovers to the realization of the perils that are threatening our precious woods and streams and wild life.

The movement represents a patriotic and unselfish endeavor to save for our children their great American outdoor heritage that they may have the priceless memories of days spent on windswept waters, nights in fragrant forests, and that they may gain the health and happiness that only the outdoors can give them. Many of the names back of this Save-Outdoor-America crusade are nationally known and insure the integrity and high standing of the league. No officers or directors receive a salary.

"Outdoor America"

For the purpose of spreading far its message, the league publishes a monthly magazine styled "Outdoor America," to which the greatest outdoor writers and artists in America contribute without pay, out of sheer love and appreciation of the rightcousness of the cause.

CLEAN-UP-DAY PROCLAMATION BY THE MAYOR

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, May 10, 11 and 12, have been designated as Civic Improvement Days for the City of Charlevoix. All owners or occupants of lands and premises in the city are requested to devote these days as far as possible to the improvement of the appearance of their property.

The city will make provisions to carry away all rubbish that is placed in a convenient place for removal, excepting leaves, ashes and brush.

Let all of our citizens co-operate in improving the appearance of our city and aid in maintaining our position as one of the clean and progressive communities of our state.

Dated May 3, 1926.

Arthur Bergeon, Mayor.

Quaker Oats "stands by" you through the morning

That's why doctors urge it to start every day

TO feel right through the morning, you must have well-balanced, complete food at breakfast. At most other meals — that is, at luncheon and at dinner—you usually get that kind of food.

But at breakfast the great dietary mistake is most often made—a hurried meal, often badly chosen.

Thus Quaker Oats, containing 16% protein, foods great tissue builder; 68% carbohydrate, its great energy element, plus all-important vitamines and the "bulk" that makes laxatives seldom needed, is the dietetic urge of the world today.

It is food that "stands by" you through the morning. Food that should start every breakfast in your home.

Quick Quaker cooks in 3 to 5 minutes. That's faster than plain toast. Don't deny yourself the natural stimulation this rich food offers.

Jacob Ypma drove up from Grand Rapids last Friday to the Greeley home. Mrs. Ypma, who has spent the past two months with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Greeley, returned with her husband Tuesday.

Lou Tellegen Portrays Gypsy In New Picture

A Russian Cossack, a Parisian Apache, an Italian Count, a Spanish Cavalier and now a Hungarian gypsy! Such is a partial reading of the screen vicissitudes of Lou Tellegen who is known throughout Hollywood as the international actor. Whenever a script calls for a foreign lead the casting director cries, "Send for Tellegen!"

Tellegen himself confesses that while his film work has provided him with a wide range of roles during his last two years of screen acting the most interesting and satisfying chance came during the making of the Fox film production; "The Outsider," an adaptation of Dorothy Brandon's play, scheduled to open Friday, May 7, at the Palace Theatre.

"Lord Jim" Greatest Tale Ever Written By Conrad

The finest traditions of the merchant marine are glorified in Joseph Conrad's "Lord Jim," coming to the Palace Theatre Tuesday and Wednesday, May 11 and 12, which Victor Fleming has produced as a Paramount picture with Percy Marmont, Shirley Mason, Noah Beery and Raymond Hatton featured in the principal roles of the cast.

Above Grade-mark is your Guarantee of superior manufacture and rigid grading at the mill. The figure within the diamond is the grade of the piece.

Homes of Worth and Beauty--

For that "Home of Your Dreams" nothing excels Native Hemlock as a building material. Used since Colonial days. Architects and builders recommend it for these vital and economical reasons:

1—Oversized studding, rafters and joists—8% to 16⅔% more wood to the piece—greater structural strength.
2—Grips nails like a vise—heat or frost can't draw them—holds your building rigid against wind strain.
3—Free from dry-rot—assures longer life for your buildings.
4—Contains no pitch—won't stain plaster—more fire resistant.
5—Easy to work—don't gum the carpenter's saw—speeds up construction and lowers building costs.
6—Takes all paints and stains perfectly.
7—And—It's Grade-marked with Licensed Association Brand and Grade plainly stamped on each piece at the mill insuring responsible manufacture and guaranteed grades.

No other structural lumber combines all seven of these very essential and practical advantages.

With good lumber like this available, why use short-lived substitutes?

Ask your lumberman to show you samples of Grade-marked Northern Hemlock. Or write us for booklet chock-full of helpful suggestions on building.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS

Council Chambers, May 3, 1926

The common council of the city of Charlevoix met on the above date with Mayor Bergeon presiding. Aldermen present: Bridge, Eckinger, Geiken, Howe, Livingston, Partridge.

Minutes of meeting held April 26, were read and approved.

Ald. Partridge offered the following resolution and moved its adoption, seconded by Ald. Bridge.

Resolved by the common council of the city of Charlevoix that,

Whereas, due hearing having been had after notice, upon the matter of the construction of a sewer in that part of Newman street lying between State street and Grant street and thence along Grant street south to West Hurlbut avenue and thence west along West Hurlbut avenue to the west line of lot 65 of Upright & Hurlbut's addition to the city of Charlevoix, and also east from Grant street along said West Hurlbut avenue to the east line of lot 74 of said addition, and no persons appearing at such hearing with objections or suggestions relative to the proposed construction of such sewer, and the mutter having been duly considered, and Whereas,

It appearing that the construction of such sewer, and the assessments of benefits to be derived therefrom can better be provided for by dividing the proposed sewer into two sewer districts.

Therefore resolved, that the part of said line of sewer described as running along Newman street between State street and Grant street, be, for all purposes, designated as Newman street sewer district—first extension, which sewer district shall be composed of and include the lands situate within the following described boundary lines, namely:

Commencing at a point on the west line of State street at its intersection with the center line of Newman street; thence along the center line of Newman street to the west corporation line of said city; thence along said west corporation line to a point 100 feet north of the north line of Stover road; thence east parallel to and 100 feet north of said Stover road Fifteen Hundred Thirty feet; thence north parallel to and Fifteen Hundred Thirty (1530) feet distant from said west corporation line, to a point on the north line of Garfield avenue being the southeast corner of lot 241 of Upright & Hurlbut's addition to said city; thence north along the east line of lots 241, 208, 183, 150, 125, and 92 of said addition, to the southwest corner of lot 90 thereof; thence east along the south line of lots 90 and 88 to the southeast corner of said lot 88; thence south to the southwest corner of lot 87 of said addition; thence east along the south line of lots 87, 86 and 85 of said addition to the southeast corner of said lot 85; thence north along the east line of said lot 85 and continuing north along the east line of lot 74 of said addition to the northwest corner of the south half of lot 75 of said addition; thence east parallel to Newman street to the west line of State street; thence north along the west line of State street to the place of beginning.

Resolved further, that the construction of such sewer in said Newmun street in accordance with the plats, plans, diagrams and specifications therefor, be and hereby is declared a necessary public improvement.

Resolved further, that City Clerk be, and hereby is instructed to advertise for and receive sealed bids for the construction of such sewer up to five o'clock p. m. on Monday, May 10th, 1926, such advertisement to be by publication of a notice thereof in the Charlevoix Courier, a newspaper printed and circulating in said city, in at least one issue of such newspaper before said date.

Resolved further, that city do, and hereby does, reserve the right to reject any or all bids so received. And further, that all bids so made shall be accompanied by a certified check, or other satisfactory security or deposit, in a sum equal to five per cent of the bid, payable to the city clerk as guaranty that the bidder will, if required by the council, enter into contract to construct such sewer in accordance with the terms of his bid.

Resolved further, that the remainder of the line of the sewer first herein described, namely a sewer in that part of Grant street lying between Newman street and West Hurlbut avenue; and in that part of said West Hurlbut avenue lying between the east line of lot 74 of Upright & Hurlbut's addition and the west line of lot 65 of said addition, be, and hereby is set out and designated as a separate sewer and comprised in a single sewer district to be known as West Hurlbut avenue and Grant street sewer district. That the district shall include all lots, parts of lots, lands and premises abutting on either side of said portions of streets.

Adopted at a regular meeting of the common council of the city of Charlevoix, held in the council rooms, in said city on the 3rd day of May, A. D. 1926, by aye and nay vote as follows: Ayes: Aldermen, Bridge, Eckinger, Geikon, Howe, Livingston, Partridge. Nays, none.

Arthur Bergeon, Mayor.
Chas. H. Lamphear, City Clerk.

Ald. Eckinger offered the following resolution and moved its adoption, second by Ald. Partridge.

Resolved by the common council of the city of Charlevoix that,

Whereas, due hearing having been had, after notices, upon the matter of the construction of a sewer in that part of Newman street in said city, lying between State street and Grant street, thence along Grant street to West Hurlbut avenue, and thence along that part of West Hurlbut avenue lying between the east line of lot 74 of Upright & Hurlbut's addition to said city and west line of lot 65 of said addition, and no persons having appeared with suggestions or objections relative to the construction of such sewer, and the matter having been duly considered by the council, and

Whereas, the city council having by resolution adopted May 3rd, 1926, divided the line of the proposed sewer uader consideration at said hearing, and having in said said hearing, and having in said resolution designated that part of said line of sewer, namely the sewer in Grant street between Newman street and West Hurlbut avenue and the sewer in West Hurlbut avenue between the east line of lot 74 and the west line of lot 65 both in Upright & Hurlbut's addition to said city, as a separate sewer district to be known as West Hurlbut avenue and Grant street sewer,

Therefore resolved further, that the construction of such sewer in accordance with the plats, plans, diagrams and specifications therefor,

FORMER LOCAL GIRL WEDS DETROIT MAN

Miss Hilda Marie Anderson Now Mrs. Jonathan Lovelace

Mrs. Mont Withers of this city informs us of the recent marriage at Riverside, California, of her sister, Hilda Marie Anderson. The following is an account of the marriage taken from a California paper:

"Dr. Ira W. Barnett officiated yesterday afternoon at a pretty spring wedding which united two young people from Michigan in the St. Cecilia chapel of the Mission Inn. Miss Marie Anderson and Jonathan Bell Lovelace were attended by a group af nine friends who later enjoyed a delightful high tea served in the sunlit patio of the Inn. The bride made a charming picture in her gown of pearl grey with barmonizing hat and slippers. She cnrried n large bouquet of bride's roses."

Mrs. Lovelace is a graduate of the Charlevoix high school, having made her home here for a number of years, and is well known by Charlevoix people and had a large following of friends here. Mr. Lovelace is a prominent young broker of McCune Brokerage firm of Detroit. They will make their home in Detroit.

EAST JORDAN MAN'S HEROISM IS CITED

Widow Receives Carnegie Award for Fatal Attempt

One Michigan man was among the select few whose heroism was recognized by the Carnegie hero fund commisslon recently. He was William John Crawford, whose widow lives at East Jordan.

Crawford lost his life in a futile effort to save nnother from drowning.

The award of the commission is a bronze medal to the widow and death benefit to her at the rate of $65 a month with $5 a month additionnl on account of esch of three children.

Crawford, 32, an iron worker, died attempting to save Lee M. Nowland, 21, a farmhand, from drowning at East Jordnn, June 27, 1924.

While wading in the south nrm of Pine Lake Nowland stepped into deep water 130 feet from shore. He could not swim. He called to Crawford and moved farther from shore.

The citation says Crawford swam 50 feet to Nowland. A struggle ensued and both sank and drowned.

Two Blasting Schools Conducted

First demonstration held at farm of Steve Jermaine of Boyne Falls, on April 29th. If there was anyone in doubt as to how good pyrotol was at blowing out stumps before the demonstrntion started, that doubt was soon dispelled ns Mr. Kessler blew out the first stump as clean as a whistle with only two pounds.

Later n green stump was tried and the results showed that they could be loosened sufficiently with n small charge, so thnt n tenm could finish the job quickly. This pyrotol comes three sticks to the pound and can be used exactly the same as dynamite, with fully as good results.

The second demonstration was conducted at the farm of Bert Elliott of Charlevoix. A rather large stump was blown out cleanly, which showed the proper mannging of the charge was the all important factor.

The most spectacular part, however, was the ditching blasting. Sixteen sticks of 50 per cent strength dynamite was used for this purpose and, according to Mr. Kessler, it is the right strength to use for ditching work, with results that startled the on-lookers.

The explosion carried the dirt and mud for several hundred feet and spsttered the swamp with a nice, black veneer for many feet in all directions. To make the story short, upon returning to the scene of action—lo and behold, there was a ditch three feet deep and at least five feet wide, just as clean as if someone hsd shaveled the mud out by hand.

The specialist stated that the greatest trouble with ditching work in most eases was that 60 per cent dynamite was used and that the distance between charges was too great. The most effective kind to use is 50 per cent strength, straight, and spacing of between 18 and 24 inches. At 20 inches spacing, only 4.9 pounds per rod is needed, which clearly shows it is much chenper to dynnmite than to dig by hand.

By the way, if you want to buy this pyrotol for stumps and stones for 10 cents per pound, send your order and mohey to the county agent at Boyne City, before Saturday, the 15th of May. It is doubtful if this opportunity will present itself again, and you will pay from two to three times ns much for dynnmite.

For all the news, read the Courier.

MRS. A. C. CLEMENT DIES IN FLORIDA

Member of Belvedere Club for Over 12 Years

Word comes from Joliet, Illinois, of the death of Mrs. Arthur C. Clement, which took place at Wilbur-by-the-Sea, Florida, April 23rd. Mrs. Clement had been a member of the Belvedere Club since 1914, and will be greatly missed by the large circle of friends, not only among the Belvedere summer colony, but in Joliet.

The Joliet Herald-News, issue of Saturday, April 25, contains the following article referring to the death of Mrs. Clement:

"Funeral services for Mrs. Arthur C. Clement, 63 years old, who died at Wilbur-by-the-Sea, Fln., Friday, will be held Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock in the home, 215 Campbell street, the Rev. E. E. Hastings officiating. Burial will be in Elmhurst cemetery.

"Mrs. Clement, who observed her 63rd birthday anniversary four days before her death, had been in failing health for the past two years.

"She was born April 19, 1863, on a farm in DuPage township, and attended the Jennings seminary at Aurora. Mrs. Clement, before her marriage, Miss Mae Eaton, had lived in Joliet for 15 years.

"In addition to her husband she is survived by two sisters, Miss Grnce Eaton of Joliet, and Mrs. Carrie Eaton Holcomb of Berkeley, Calif."

CHAPTER X—Continued

"The greater his shame!" she hissed. "That he should have suffered you to take me alive!"

"We are friends," urged my relative, lowering his voice. "'Tis but a pretense we make——"

"Friends! Ah, you are friends to the Powers of Evil."

"Be patient a little longer, Moira," pleaded her father from his perch on Peter's shoulder. "I'll explain—"

She went of a sudden entirely limp and burst into a passion of weeping.

"Oh, padre, padre, to think of you a coward! 'Tis worst of all!"

O'Donnell swore helplessly.

I climbed by way of a carronade on to the inboard bulwarks, holding Mistress O'Donnell with one arm while I took a strand of rigging with the other; and even as I collected myself to jump the gap that separated the two vessels she twisted free of me and would have slid overside—to be crushed to death, most likely, for the two hulls were continually grinding together. I caught her in the nick of time, letting go my clutch upon the rigging, and was near to being dragged down with her, teetering back and forth as pointless as a feather blown by the wind. So that, what with her struggles and my own loss of balance, I gritted my teeth and jumped most precariously, hit or miss, and, I am bound to admit, landed upon the James' bulwarks rather by good fortune than skill.

I dropped to the deck in no very pleasant mood. "An ill recompense for one that hath been at pains to spare your father's reputation, mistress," I growled, as surly as any pirate of the crew. "You might ha' been my death."

She looked at me, too surprised to answer at once, and before she had recovered herself, my great-uncle and Peter joined us, Peter still placidly carrying Colonel O'Donnell like a flour sack.

I Caught Her in the Nick of Time.

Murray cast a swift glance of appraisal around his ship.

"We have come through very creditably," he remarked. "Martin, let me know as soon as the prize's treasure is all aboard."

He turned to us.

"The curtain is ready to fall upon our comedy. Will you accept my arm, Mistress O'Donnell? A glass of wine and a bite of sailor's fare will taste better than Robert's ear, which your hunger prompted you to nibble. Fie, fie, my lass!"

She stared at him with utter horror, yet suffered him to place her hand upon his arm. The spirit was gone out of her, exhausted by the strain she had been subjected to. She was like a butterfly spiked on a thorn.

Something of the same sensation must have affected my relative, for he patted the limp hand on his arm with a truly paternal kindness.

"Come, come, did I not say the comedy was ended?" he chided her. "You are as safe here as in your Spanish convent. But the dark is too puddle for our revelations. We will seek the seclusion of the cabin, and there the complete tale shall be unfolded for your reassurance, with your father a witness to support it."

She shook her head.

"I—I—know not what you mean."

"To be sure," he agreed. "But you soon shall. Peter, good friend, prithee take three steps within the companionway and there deposit Colonel O'Donnell with decent propriety upon the two limbs Nature intended for his locomotion. Ah! Excellent! Allow me, mistress!"

Ben Gunn and the two negro lackeys ushered the party to their seats. Mistress O'Donnell sunk into hers with a weariness that was pathetic. She was quite regardless of her surroundings. Peter took his accustomed place at the opposite end, and I sat beside her.

"Let me give you a glass of this rum vinc, my lass," said my great-uncle. "'Tis efficacious for fatigue and the migraine. See, I taste it myself. 'Tis quite all right. You, too, chevalier? Excellent! Perhaps you will pass the flask to Master Corlaer yonder. And Master Ormerod yonder—my nephew. But I believe you and your daughter have had previous acquaintance with him."

O'Donnell muttered something none too civil, but the maid bestirred herself, and her eyes examined me again with the mingling of horror and stupefaction which governed her mood.

"How come you here?" she asked. "You—you—are you also a pirate?"

"I am a captive as surely as yourself," I returned. "Aye, more so."

"A captive!" she exclaimed, her interest fanned alight. "But surely you—"

My great-uncle interrupted her.

"Please, Mistress O'Donnell! Our tale is sufficiently complicated. Let us not make it more difficult to comprehend by confusing it at the beginning with side-issues. First, that there may be no misunderstanding, 'tis true that I am he who is known as Captain Rip-Rap."

She shrank away from him in a renewed access of terror.

"I have already told you that you have no cause to fear me," he went on gently, "and to prove that to you I will add that I am no outlaw—what is called a pirate, although I detest the word myself—because I am a Jacobite. I believe, too, I may claim your father as my friend."

He looked loquirngly at O'Donnell. The Irishman drained his glass.

"'Tis true," he assented. "This gentleman is one Andrew Murray, who was out in the '15 and was afterward in trouble in New York province on the score of intrigues with our friends and the French, Moira. He hath been a good servant to King James."

"But for why will you have been the death of all the poor-folk on the Santissima Trinidad?" she cried."

"'Tis regrettable that Spaniards had to die, lass," answered my great-uncle, lowering his voice to a proper depth of emotion. "But I call to your mind that Spain has not helped the Good Cause as she might when there was a bonny chance of refolding the Stuarts home."

"That is God's truth," she admitted with quick passion, "but I am thinking 'tis not overhonest."

"You talk nonsense, Moira," blustered her father. "Is it not better that this treasure should be employed to recover England and all the lands pertaining to the English crown for their rightful rulers—who will assist in the restoration of the True Faith—than it should be poured into the pockets of the king's favorites at Madrid? Why, lass, there are great lords, aye, a prince of the Church, no less, that set the seal of their approval to what we do. The people of Spain will be thanking us for the use to which we turned their treasure—and then we'll pay it back," he added with a happy inspiration.

"Odds, that we will!" indorsed my great-uncle. "What's a million and a half pounds to royal Spain? Aye, or to an England that waxes grandly prosperous under wise Stuart rule?"

She was silent.

His suave manner conveyed subtly an implication of the importance he attached to her approval.

"I would not inflict a dose of the untried philosophy of age upon one so young and charming, my dear," he went on; "but possibly you will forgive me if I indicate to you the regrettable circumstance that the ideal is seldom attainable? In order to secure the means for re-establishing King James and what your father so quaintly terms the True Faith in the British Isles, it hath been necessary for a gentleman of questionable legal status—myself—associated with others of yet more dubious antecedents and repute, to procure the death of divers Spanish persons, who, of themselves, had never wrought any harm against us or the cause we served. 'Tis by precisely such contraventions of precedent and lettered laws that special events are brought about. I trust my reasoning is clear?"

O'Donnell emptied a glass with an impatient growl that masked an oath.

"You are wasting time, Murray. Moira is a good lass, and my daughter; but what she thinks of this venture—"

"—is of considerable importance to me," my great-uncle protested. "I was compelled in the beginning of our acquaintance to give her a wrong impression of my character, and I am extremely desirous to have her good opinion."

"But why is Master Ormerod a captive? Why does he say I am a captive, if—"

"You are not a captive," returned my great-uncle. "At least, I say that under the impression that, as your father's daughter and a devout Jacobite, you would not, whatever your personal feelings might be, undertake to interfere with our plans."

"I am wondering are you all mad," she said blankly.

"You may well say so!" I exclaimed. "The truth is this, mistress: Master Murray hath besides his own ship's company a second band of pirates the which are restless beneath his thumb. He desired me to be his lieutenant to help him hold them in restraint, and—"

"You restrained them bravely aboard the Santissima Trinidad!" she said.

"That was to save you!" I declared.

"Truth, and I'm saved," she echoed sarcastically.

"Yes, you and your father," said Murray gravely. "Colonel O'Donnell risked everything on this coup of ours. To protect him 'twas essential it should never be known he was privy to it. We had the choice of two means to that end. One was to sink the Santissima Trinidad with all hands except yourselves. The other was to arrange to remove the two of you in such fashion as to establish your innocence. I am free to say the first was the easiest course. The dictates of humanity, however, prevailed."

How he rolled that last sentence.

"And what do you know of humanity that soaked the decks of the Santissima Trinidad with blood?" she answered. "You that the Spaniards cite as a byword for cruelty and wickedness! I will not believe a word that you say. I will not believe any man here. You are all smirched with the same badness."

Peter leaned his great hulk forward upon the table.

"Don't talk no more, you," he commanded the Irishman. "Neen, I talk! Little gal, Bob-andt I we don't come wit' Murray because we like to. He makes us. Ja! He boss us. He uses your fat'er. He uses you. But when we are wit' him we do what we can to take care of you. It is not good for little gals to be on pirate ships, Neen!"

He leaned back.

"Dot's all."

Her blue eyes dwelt seriously upon his vast, flat face, with its insignificant features blobbed here and there.

"I believe you," she said.

"Stap me," jeered Murray. "Our Peter is discovered a squire o' dames—a preux chevalier. Peter, you ha' disguised your talents. We must know more of them."

"Ja," said Peter uncantly.

Mistress O'Donnell rose.

"Sir—" she addressed my great-uncle—"you will be excusing me if I do not linger for more conversation. What you do hath no concern with me. I am very distraught, and my head, I—I—" she swayed a little—"I would lie me down and—and—weep."

I slipped from my seat and steadied her.

"Take her to your stateroom, Robert," said my great-uncle. "You must lodge with Peter."

He rose, himself, bowing with the fine courtesy which became him nobly.

I guided her as far as the stateroom door. She thanked me faintly as I opened it for her, and I was abruptly impelled to recover her friendship.

—"What I tried to tell you was the truth," I murmured, the words spilling fast from my tongue. "Indeed it was so! Peter Corlaer had the right of it. We two are no pirates, and all that we ha' done has been intended to make smooth your way."

There was a wistful light in her eyes as she lifted them under long, black lashes.

"God send you be honest, sir" she said. "I—I must wait to judge. The world is gone all twirly-round. Even the padre—"

She choked back a sob.

"You will not misunderstand," she smiled with quiet dignity, "if I say no more that maybe already ha' said too much."

CHAPTER XI

The Dead Man's Chest

When I returned to the main cabin Ben Gunn was placing food on the table and my great-uncle was removing the liquor from Colonel O'Donnell's reach.

Nothing was said until the steward and the negroes had retired. Then Murray sat forward in his chair.

"There is a certain matter of importance to be discussed, colonel," he announced. "I must have your attention.

O'Donnell nodded sullkily.

"As you know, the crew of my associate, Captain Flint, some of whom you saw in New York, are not under the same discipline as my own men. I must have the security of the Rendezvous, and for that I must needs pay Flint. Also, I may have need of him in other ways. This venture is not yet consummated. 'Tis contrary to my instinct to break with Flint if it can be avoided. 'Tis similarly contrary to my instinct to trust him farther than I must, and in this immediate case I am loath to trust him."

"What's to do?" rasped O'Donnell. "Raise his price?"

"No, no. My suggestion is that we should stow away our friends' portion of the treasure before we return to the Rendezvous."

"Where?"

"I have been turning that in my mind for several weeks. There is an island south of Porto Rico in the Virgin group, a barren dot, hated by all seamen, for sorry memories of shipwreck and suffering. They call it the Dead Man's Chest."

The Irishman frowned.

"What? Dump this gold we have risked so much to win on a sandbar for the first passing fellow to—"

"I have said no man will go there if he can help it."

"I like it not!" scowled O'Donnell. "My friends would have ugly things to say did the stuff slip from our hands in that way."

"'Tis less likely to slip from our hands on the Dead Man's Chest than aboard the Royal James," answered Murray. "Bethink you, chevalier! 'Twill give us time to let the hue and cry of the Spaniards die down and to arrange with your friends for its reception."

"Whatever you say, 'tis a miserable alternative," protested O'Donnell. "Let us rather hold north and set the treasure ashore in France."

"To run the gauntlet of French and English cruisers?" my great-uncle demanded scornfully. "'Odsblood, man,

"Last o' the —— —— Ruddy Boys Is Comin' Aboard, Sir," He Said.

you are out of your mind! And when you had landed it, what would you do? How much of it would go to your friends and how much to grease the pockets of French officials?"

My great-uncle took snuff, tapping the box thoughtfully after he had dusted the powder in his nostrils.

"To be strictly honest with you gentlemen," he remarked at last, "I am disposed to return to Flint because I foresee a possibility of my desiring to sacrifice him to cover our tracks. I have no definite plan in mind, but a situation might shape itself in which it would be desirable to supply a fugitive for Spaniard, Frenchman and English to chase. I should vastly prefer—as I am sure you would, too—that the fugitive be the Walrus and not the James. Also, until that situation arises, the Rendezvous is the safest hiding-place I know this side of Africa."

"Last o' the —— —— ruddy-boys is comin' aboard, sir," he said. "What course will ye set?"

Murray looked at the Irishman.

"Here's the moment for decision, sir," he said. "'Tis for you to say what shall be done."

O'Donnell smacked his open hand upon the table top.

"A truce to arguing!" he exclaimed. "I am in your hands, Murray, whether it pleases me or not. Do whichever you think best."

My great-uncle turned to the mate.

"Cast loose from the prize, Master Martin and make all sail. The course is so'east by south."

"Aye, aye, sir."

There was an interval of silence after he had gone. The shouts of the pirates echoed from the deck, with the creaking of halyards and flapping of sails. The Royal James seemed to shake herself as she sidled free of the battered hull of the Santissima Trinidad, and through the stern windows showed the bowsprit and fo'rsle of the Spaniard, still smothered beneath a mess of cutups and broken spars and rigging. Slowly we drew past her.
